THE THRONE ROOM IN QUEEN BRANGOMAR'S PALACE

The Throne Room is a fine apartment, hung with blue damask embroidered with silver peacocks—birds of which QUEEN BRANGOMAR is very fond. At the back wide steps lead to a terrace of white marble. Beyond shines the blue sea. On one side stands the great throne, inlaid with coloured mosaics. Opposite is an entrance leading to the other rooms of the palace.

When the Play begins, seven of the MAIDS OF HONOUR to PRINCESS SNOW WHITE are playing a game with coloured balls. They are little girls about twelve years old, and their names are ROSALYS, AMELOTTE, ERMENGARDE, GUINIVERE, CHRISTABEL, URSULA and LINNETTE. As they play they sing:

GAME OF BALL SONG.

MAIDS OF HONOUR.

High and low,

High and low,

Round about and 'cross they go.

Blue and green,

Gold and white,

Toss them true and hold them tight.

Miss a ball,

Let it fall,

Make the least mistake at all;

One, two, three,

Out goes she!

One, two, three, and out goes she!

[Just here Rosalys does miss, and the others rush to "tag" her, crying, "Rosalys is out!" "Rosalys is out!"

ROSALYS. I don't care. It's not an interesting game anyway!

CHRISTABEL. Play again?

ERMENGARDE. One game.

GUINIVERE. I will.

SCENE I

[But just as they are about to begin again,
SIR DANDIPRAT BOMBAS, the Court
Chamberlain, appears on the terrace.
He is a fat, puffy little man, with an enormous wig and a great sense of his own importance.

SIR DANDIPRAT. Ah, young ladies . . . What?
Playing in the Throne Room? Tut, tut! Tut, tut!

MAIDS OF HONOUR. Oh, please don't tell.
Don't tell the Queen.
We didn't break anything.

SIR DANDIPRAT. No, on the whole I won't tell her Majesty. She might blame me. As I was going to say, I have an important announcement to make. Since Lady Cecily was sent home with the mumps your usual number, eight, has been reduced to seven. Am I right?

SNOW WHITE

One from eight leaves seven I think? [He tries to do the sum on his fingers.]

ROSALYS. Yes, it is seven.

SIR DANDIPRAT. I am right. Her Majesty the Queen wishes your number kept complete, so I have brought another young lady to take the vacant place. [He leads on little LADY ASTOLAIN and presents her:] The Lady Astolaine. These are the Maids of Honour to the Princess Snow White.

[LADY ASTOLAIN curtsies to the MAIDS OF HONOUR and they in turn curtsey to her.

SIR DANDIPRAT goes on

You must teach Lady Astolaine all she ought to know as a Maid of Honour. You'd better teach her your gavotte first; you may have to dance it almost immediately. [And the little man dances a few steps, puffing out the tune meantime:] "Tum, tum, tum, ti; dum, tum, tum, ti! And how to make a proper curtsey—so. [And he tries to make one.] And how to retire backwards gracefully—so! [But as he retires backwards he stumbles against the terrace steps, and falls flat on his back. He is so embarrassed by this mishap that he scrambles out of the room as fast as he can, puffing:] Gracefully, young ladies! Gracefully! Gracefully! [till he is out of sight].

SCENE I

ASTOLAIN. [Laughing.] Who's that old thing?

ROSALYS. [Mimicking SIR DANDIPRAT's voice and strut.] That's Sir Dandiprat Bombas, Court Chamberlain to the Queen.

CHRISTABEL. He gives us our "instructions."

ERMENGARDE. But we don't mind him.

ASTOLAIN. Do you have good times here?

ROSALYS. Splendid; except [confidentially] when the Queen is especially cross.

CHRISTABEL. And then, oh me! we have to be careful!

ASTOLAIN. I don't think I shall like the Queen!

MAIDS OF HONOUR. [Hastily.] Ssh!

S N O W W H I T E

ASTOLAIN. Why, ssh?

ROSALYS. [Whispering.] Never say anything uncomplimentary about the Queen!

MAIDS OF HONOUR. [Loudly, intending to be overheard.] We all adore the Queen! [But they shake their heads, and make little faces to show ASTOLAIN that they don't mean it.]

ASTOLAIN. [Whispering.] I shall hate the Queen!

MAIDS OF HONOUR. [Also whispering.] We all do!

ASTOLAIN. But I'm to be Maid of Honour to the Princess Snow White, so I'll take my orders from her.

ROSALYS. Oh, Snow White never gives orders.

ASTOLAIN. I shall like her. When shall I see her?

CHRISTABEL. Sometimes, every day; and then again not for ever so long. It just depends on the Queen's temper.

SIR DANDIPRAT BOMBAS, THE COURT CHAMBERLAIN, APPEARS ON THE TERRACE

SCENE I

ERMENGARDE. And how much Snow White has to do.

ASTOLAIN. I thought a Princess never had anything to do.

CHRISTABEL. [Confidentially.] Well, you see, Snow White isn't exactly a regular Princess.

ROSALYS. Why, Christabel! Of course she's a regular Princess, but . . .

ASTOLAIN. But what? [Wonderingly.] You don't hate Snow White too?

MAIDS OF HONOUR. [In indignant chorus.] Hate Snow White! The idea! She's the dearest! Loveliest! Kindest! We just adore her!

ROSALYS. [To the others.] Oh, do you think we could get Snow White to come and see Astolaine now, while we're all alone?

CHRISTABEL. Oh, let's try! [And all the little [9]

S N O W W H I T E

MAIDS hop up and down and clap their hands with glee at the idea.]

ROSALYS. Where is she?

CHRISTABEL. Kitchen, I think. She said she had to bake bread first and cookies afterward.

ROSALYS. Bread is important, but cookies aren't: Anyway it can't do any harm to ask her.

AMELOTTE. I'll go! I'll go! [And off she darts to the kitchen.]

ASTOLAIN. [Wonderingly.] But what is the Princess doing in the kitchen?

ROSALYS. Of course you don't understand about Snow White yet. It's a court secret. [To the others.] But I think we ought to tell her right away, don't you? before she sees Snow White, or she might think . . .

[They evidently agree, for they all rush at ASTOLAIN and begin to speak at once.

MAIDS OF HONOUR. I'll tell her! No, let me, I know! Snow White was born . . . This Queen isn't her real mother. It's like a fairy-tale!

S C E N E I

ASTOLAIN. [Stopping her ears.] I can't possibly understand if you all talk at once. [But each little MAID, thinking that the others will stop, again begins to tell SNOW WHITE's story, so that the confusion is worse than before. ASTOLAIN has to hold her ears a second time.] That's worse! There's only one fair way to decide. I'll "count out," and the one that's out shall tell.

ROSALYS. Hm! I suppose that's fair,—only I should tell it so much the best.

CHRISTABEL. [To ASTOLAIN.] Well then, you count.

[So ASTOLAIN sings the "Counting-out Song," counting as she sings.

MAIDS OF HONOUR. [Regretfully.] Oh, it's Rosalys!

ROSALYS. I was so afraid it wouldn't be me. Come over here where we can talk quietly. [She runs to the throne and climbs into the big seat. The others cuddle close beside her.] Now, nobody must interrupt, except by 'spress permission. Button mouths! First, Queen Brangomar isn't Snow White's real mother.

ASTOLAINE. Oh, I know that!

CHRISTABEL. But my father says that her real father and mother were the best King and Queen . . .

ROSALYS. [Continuing.] One day in winter before Snow White was born, her real mother was sitting by the window embroidering at an ebony frame. And she pricked her finger, so she opened the window and shook the drop of blood on the snow outside. And it looked so beautiful that she said, "Oh, how I wish I had a little daughter with hair as black as ebony, skin as white as snow, and lips as red as blood. She'd never had a baby before; but a little while after a baby daughter was born with . . .

MAIDS OF HONOUR. [Chanting impressively.] Hair as black as ebony, skin as white as snow, and lips as red as blood.

ASTOLAIN. So that's why they named her Snow White.

ROSALYS. But then Snow White's mother died; and I suppose the King thought there ought to be somebody to mind the baby, for he married Queen Brangomar—she's Queen now.

ASTOLAIN. Oh, I see!

SCENE I

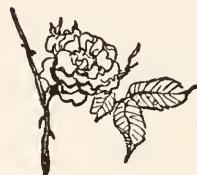

ROSALYS. As long as the King lived, Queen Brangomar was as sweet as sugar to Snow White.

CHRISTABEL. [Interrupting in a whisper.] I am glad she was ever nice to somebody.

ROSALYS. But after he died, then— [She pauses impressively.]

ASTOLAIN. Then . . . what?

ROSALYS. Then—she grew awfully jealous of Snow White.

ASTOLAIN. Not really?

ERMENGARDE. Of course everybody loved the Princess best.

CHRISTABEL. And Brangomar really is the horridest woman!

Rosalys. Ssh! First she pretended that Snow White might grow up vain, so she took away all her princessy clothes and made her wear old, rag-baggety things.

CHRISTABEL. Then she pretended that she might grow up lazy, so she made her sweep and dust the Palace.

S N O W W H I T E

ROSALYS. And now Snow White is really almost like a kitchen-maid, and sleeps in a little closet under the stairs where we keep the umbrellas and overshoes.

ASTOLAIN. [Springing up.] I think it's outrageous! Why does Princess Snow White stand it? I wouldn't!

MAIDS OF HONOUR. [Apprehensively.] Oh, ssh!

ASTOLAIN. Why "ssh"? I never heard anything so "sshy" as this Palace.

ROSALYS. [Whispering.] But what can she do? The Queen . . .

ASTOLAIN. I don't want to hear any more about that hateful Queen.

ROSALYS. But you must. It isn't safe that you shouldn't. We'll have to tell her. [To CHRISTABEL.] You tell.

SCENE I

CHRISTABEL. No, you. It makes me feel all creepy.

ROSALYS. [To ERMENGARDE.] Well, you!

ERMENGARDE. No! You were counted out.

ASTOLAIN. Well, please somebody!

ROSALYS. Oh, dear! [She goes on in a hushed whisper.] The reason it's not safe to do or say anything against the Queen is—that she might magic you!

ASTOLAIN. What do you mean?

ROSALYS. Enchant you, bewitch you;—do some terrible magic thing to you!

ASTOLAIN. You don't mean that she's a . . . Witch? [The others nod silently, and snuggle closer together.]

ROSALYS. If she isn't a Witch herself she is friends with one. You see she must really be very old.

CHRISTABEL. She's thirty if she's a minute!

S N O W W H I T E

ROSALYS. And she's still the most beautiful woman in the Seven Kingdoms.

CHRISTABEL. And once a chamber-maid found a broom-stick, the kind that witches ride on, in her bed-room.

ROSALYS. So you see if you did anything against her she might magic you, and turn you into a pig.

ERMENGARDE. Or a toad.

ROSALYS. Or a caterpillar.

CHRISTABEL. Or something worse.

ASTOLAIN. There isn't anything worse than a caterpillar! Oh, I want to go home! I am afraid! [And she bursts into tears. The others gather about to comfort her.]

MAIDS OF HONOUR. Please, Astolaine, there's really nothing to be afraid of. It's all right, honestly. The Queen hardly ever notices us! And we all want you to stay, for we like you ever so much.

ROSALYS. [In despair.] Oh, if Snow White would only come now! Then she wouldn't want to go home.

SCENE I

[Just at this moment AMELOTTE reappears in the doorway.

AMELOTTE. Princess Snow White says she'll come if nobody's here.

GUINIVERE. There isn't anybody.

AMELOTTE. She'll come! She'll come! She's right here! [And she darts out of sight again.]

ROSALYS. Oh, she's coming! Snow White's coming! Now you'll see!

[In joyous excitement the MAIDS OF HONOUR join hands and dance a "ring-around," and then wind up into a little squirming knot, hugging each other and dancing up and down.

AMELOTTE. [Re-entering, announces.] The Princess Snow White!

[Instantly the MAIDS OF HONOUR separate and kneel to receive their little Princess.

SNOW WHITE

[SNOW WHITE appears in the doorway.
She is dressed in a frock of ragged black,
and she has on neither shoes nor stockings.
Nevertheless she has the air of a little Princess.]

SNOW WHITE. Is this my new playmate, Lady Astolaine? I hope you'll like me.

ASTOLAIN. [Kissing the hand which SNOW WHITE holds out to her.] I love you already, dear Princess.

[Like a little flight of birds the MAIDS OF HONOUR run to surround SNOW WHITE.]

MAIDS OF HONOUR. We all love you, dear Princess!

SNOW WHITE. [Laughing down at them.] And I love you, all of you! But did you want anything particular? I've left hundreds of cookies in my oven.

ROSALYS. Can't you stay just a moment and teach Astolaine our gavotte? Sir Dandiprat said that she must learn it at once; and you dance so much the best.

S C E N E I

SNOW WHITE. Do you think I have time?

MAIDS OF HONOUR. Oh yes, yes!

ROSALYS. [Running out onto the terrace.] I'll watch, and tell if anybody's coming.

SNOW WHITE. [To ASTOLAIN.] You'd better be my partner. It's very simple.

[The MAIDS OF HONOUR take positions for their Dance, and as SNOW WHITE teaches ASTOLAIN the steps they sing:

The musical score consists of five staves of piano sheet music, arranged vertically. The top staff uses a treble clef and a key signature of one flat. The second and third staves also use a treble clef. The fourth and fifth staves use a bass clef. The score includes several dynamic markings such as dim., cresc., f, sf, p, p cresc. molto, rit., and molto rall.. Fingerings are indicated above the notes, such as '1 2 3' or '2 3'. Performance instructions like senza Ped. Da Capo and Tempo I d = 132 are also present. The music features various note patterns, rests, and dynamic changes throughout the five staves.

ROSALYS. Ssh! Old Dandiprat's coming!

SNOW WHITE. Oh dear, I must run . . .

ROSALYS. [Catching her.] No, don't! He won't stay a minute. Hide behind the throne till he's gone.

MAIDS OF HONOUR. Yes, yes. Quickly! Behind the throne! [SNOW WHITE runs behind the throne, and the MAIDS OF HONOUR spread themselves out before it so that she is quite hidden. But they are not a moment too soon, for SIR DANDIPRAT waddles in from the terrace, followed by two solemn FLUNKIES in gorgeous liveries.]

SIR DANDIPRAT. Ah, young ladies! I am fortunate to have found you all together. I have a most important announcement to make. I composed it myself. [He unrolls an imposing parchment, and reads.] "Whereas, our gracious Queen has been informed that his Highness, Prince Florimond, heir to the Kingdom of Calydon, will call upon her Majesty this afternoon to deliver an important letter from his royal father, I have arranged the following reception. At four-fifteen precisely this Proclamation will be read.” [He consults his watch.] Dear me! Five minutes late already! I shall have to alter it. [And with a sigh he makes the correction with a gold pencil.] “At four-twenty precisely this Proclamation will be read. At four-thirty Prince Florimond will arrive, and be shown at once to the throne-room by—ahem!—myself. The Maids of Honour will dance their gavotte to amuse his Highness until the Queen is announced, when they will immediately retire. By order of me, Sir Dandiprat Bombas, Court Chamberlain.

“Signed, Yours very truly,
“Sir Dandiprat Bombas.”

“P. S. Her Majesty the Queen regrets that, owing to her duties in the kitchen, Princess Snow White will be unable to attend.” You understand, young ladies?

S N O W W H I T E

ROSALYS. Perfectly, Sir Dandiprat.

SIR DANDIPRAT. You have eight minutes and thirty-one seconds to prepare. [And he trips busily away again, followed by the FLUNKIES.] ASTOLAIN. Gracious! I can't possibly learn that dance in eight minutes and thirty-one seconds!

CHRISTABEL. And we must dance in pairs!

ERMENGARDE. What shall we do?

ROSALYS. [Calling to SNOW WHITE who is still hidden behind the throne.] Princess Snow White, what shall we do?

[There is no answer.]

ASTOLAIN. It's all right, Princess. Sir Dandiprat has gone.

[Still there is no answer; and puzzled, the little MAIDS call, one after another:

ROSALYS. Princess Snow White!

CHRISTABEL. Princess Snow White!

GUINIVERE. Princess Snow White!

S C E N E I

[Still no answer. ROSALYS runs behind the throne.]

ROSALYS. Oh, she's crying! Oh, dear Princess!

[They all run to SNOW WHITE, and find her hiding her face and sobbing silently.]

MAIDS OF HONOUR. [Surrounding and embracing her.] Oh, what's the matter? Please don't cry! We can't bear to see you unhappy! If you cry we shall cry, too!

SNOW WHITE. I didn't mean to cry. I won't! A princess should never cry. [She smiles resolutely, though her eyes are full of tears.] There! But I did so want to see Prince Florimond again. He sends me a valentine every year; and long ago, when his father came to visit mine, we were wheeled about in the same baby-carriage. He must be grown up now.

ASTOLAIN. I think it's an outrageous shame!

SNOW WHITE. But what can I do? You heard. [Quoting.] "P. S. Her Majesty regrets that the Princess will be unable to attend."

ASTOLAIN. If I were a princess I'd do what I chose, and if the Queen didn't like it I'd . . .

MAIDS OF HONOUR. [Apprehensively.] Astolaine! Hush!

ASTOLAIN. I'm tired of hushing.

SNOW WHITE. She's right! I am a king's daughter after all; and if I am always meek and do just what I'm told I'll stay in that hateful kitchen all my life. Oh! wouldn't I like to march right in before everybody and say, "Prince Florimond, I'm your cousin Snow White. I apologise for my frock, but it's all I have; and I can't let you kiss my hand because it's all covered with flour. But I did want to see you again, after riding with you in a baby-carriage when you were two and I was a half—and I have! Good-bye!" And then I'd march back to my kitchen.

MAIDS OF HONOUR. Oh, please, please don't, dear Princess!

ROSALYS. The Queen would be so angry she might even . . .

LO! THROUGH A SMOKING CIRCLE IN THE FLOOR, WITCH HEX
DOES APPEAR

S C E N E I

ASTOLAIN. [Struck with an idea.] Wait! The Queen won't be here when we dance for the Prince?

ROSALYS. No. Why?

ASTOLAIN. Then why can't the Princess dance in my place? She could wear my veil over her face, and I'd say afterward that I had—oh, measles or something else spotty.

CHRISTABEL. [In delight.] Oh, Astolaine! [She runs to hug her for the suggestion.]

SNOW WHITE. Oh dear! I wish it were possible,—but my frock!

ROSALYS. Why can't we all lend her something?

CHRISTABEL. Why not? We have on heaps more than we need.

ROSALYS. She could have my over-skirt. [She pulls it up to show an under-skirt almost as elaborate.]

CHRISTABEL. And my “watteau.”

S N O W W H I T E

AMELOTTE. And my lace jacket.

ERMENGARDE. And my cap and pearls.

ROSALYS. We could dress her perfectly! [And they all hop up and down with little squeaks of delight.]

ASTOLAIN. Will you do it, Princess? Oh, will you?

SNOW WHITE. You darlings! I suppose I oughtn't—but I will!

[And she runs behind the throne to dress, with GUINIVERE to help her. The other little MAIDS unpin and unhook and twist and turn to reach hard buttons at a great rate, as you can judge from the things they say.

MAIDS OF HONOUR. Here's my veil! Oh, she doesn't want a veil first; help me with this skirt. I can't unhook me! These pearls just won't untangle! Please come and unpin this. No, me first! I won't go to either if you don't decide! She's ready for the skirt now. You unhook while

I squeeze. Now! one, two, three! There isn't room for all our fingers on one little hook! Here's the jacket!

[And now they're all behind the throne helping SNOW WHITE on with the new things, except poor CHRISTABEL, who is left writhing to reach a pin at the back of her neck.]

CHRISTABEL. I think you're just mean! I know it will prick! It did! Well, anyway, I know where it is now. [And with an enormous twist, she succeeds in unfastening her "watteau."]

ROSALYS. [Dancing out, waving SNOW WHITE's black frock.] Here's her little black dress. What shall I do with it?

ASTOLAINE. [Following.] Oh, put it anywhere!

ROSALYS. But where is anywhere?

ASTOLAINE. Here, stuff it under this cushion on the throne. [She does so.] They'll never find it

S N O W W H I T E

there. Won't it be a joke when the Queen sits on it?

ROSALYS. Oh, why did you say that? Now, I shall just giggle and giggle and giggle! [And they run behind the throne again.]

[SNOW WHITE is almost dressed now; and the little MAIDS, one after another, tip-toe away from the throne, whispering:

CHRISTABEL.

Oh, she looks like a bride, and she's perfectly sweet.

ERMENGARDE.

All silver and white from her head to her feet.

ROSALYS.

Her lips red as blood, and her hair black as night!

ASTOLAINE.

She's lovely, she's lovely, our Princess Snow White.

[They stand waiting for her. There is a moment's pause, and then ROSALYS calls:

ROSALYS. Aren't you coming, Princess?

S C E N E I

SNOW WHITE. [From behind the throne.]
Just a moment, till I shake out my hair. There!

[She steps into sight. The MAIDS sink down in involuntary curtsies at the sight of her.

CHRISTABEL. She is lovelier than apple blossoms.

ASTOLAIN. Lovelier than anybody I ever saw.

ROSALYS. [In a hushed voice.] More beautiful than the Queen!

CHRISTABEL. [Whispering.] The Queen must never see her like this.

GUINIVERE. Never!

SNOW WHITE. [Who has been putting the last touches to her dress,—suddenly.] Oh look! My feet! [And indeed her little white feet are bare!]

ASTOLAIN. [After a pause.] Oh, I don't think it matters. The Prince is a gentleman, and no gentleman would look at a lady's feet except to admire them.

S N O W W H I T E

SNOW WHITE. But I'd be different.

ASTOLAIN. Then let's all take off our shoes and stockings.

ROSALYS. Of course!

[Immediately they plump down on the floor. But they have hardly begun when a trumpet sounds from the terrace.]

SNOW WHITE. There's the Prince now!

ASTOLAIN. We can't stay here. Let's run into the anteroom to finish.

SNOW WHITE. I am so afraid something may happen. Really I ought not to, but I do so want to see him!

MAIDS OF HONOUR. Hurry! Hurry! dear Princess! [And they hasten off into the anteroom, drawing SNOW WHITE with them.]

[They are only just in time, for music sounds on the terrace, and the throne-room fills with DUKES and DUCHESSES (none of lower rank are allowed) all in *their best robes and Sunday coronets.

S C E N E I

Then on struts SIR DANDIPRAT, more important and puffy than ever.*

SIR DANDIPRAT. [Announcing.] His Highness, Prince Florimond, Heir Apparent to the Kingdom of Calydon.

[The PRINCE appears, followed by his pages, VALENTINE and VIVIAN. He is a handsome, manly youth, dressed in blue and gold. He bows politely to the kneeling DUKES and DUCHESSES as SIR DANDIPRAT ushers him to the throne.

SIR DANDIPRAT. I regret, your Highness, that the Queen hasn't quite finished doing her hair; but she will be here in a moment. Meantime, may the Maids of Honour entertain your Highness with a little dance?

THE PRINCE. It would give me great pleasure.

SIR DANDIPRAT. It is a very simple dance, your Highness; but considering their youth, the . . . [But he stops because his eye falls upon a little pink shoe that GUINIVERE has left behind. He picks it up, hides it under his coat-tails and stumbles on.] . . . the young persons do it very . . . er . . . very . . . [And now he spies a stocking, and in hiding that the clumsy little man lets the shoe fall. This confuses him still more, but he goes on.] er, very creditably indeed . . . [And he sees a garter! This completes his embarrassment. He forgets the rest of his speech altogether, and cries:] Really they will drive me distracted! And where are they now? [He dives about among the DUKES and DUCHESSES hunting for them, just as they appear in the doorway.] Ah, here you are! Well, begin your dance at once! [And off he puffs to find the QUEEN, wiping his forehead alternately with shoe and stocking as he goes.]

[The MAIDS OF HONOUR begin their GAVOTTE. They are all veiled and all bare-footed, so that you couldn't tell SNOW WHITE from the others unless you happened to know that she was dressed in silver and white. But there is something about her that attracts the young PRINCE from the first; and as the dance progresses he becomes so interested that he comes down from the throne to watch her more closely. As the first figure ends he is close beside her.

THE PRINCE. [To SNOW WHITE.]

In the measure to ensue,
Lady, may I dance with you?

SNOW WHITE. [Giving him her hand.]

Sir, could any maid withstand
Such a flattering command?

THE PRINCE.

Then I ask another grace,
Won't you please unveil your face?

SNOW WHITE. [Hesitating, and then,]

Yes, if secret it may be,
Secret between you and me.

[The second figure of the Dance begins,
SNOW WHITE now dancing with the PRINCE. Once in awhile we overhear what they are saying.

S N O W W H I T E

SNOW WHITE. [Playfully.]

You look at me as if—we bow—

You'd never seen my face till now.

THE PRINCE.

Do you think I could forget
If we two had ever met?

SNOW WHITE.

Yet, in silence, side by side,
Once we sat—until I cried!

THE PRINCE. [Puzzled.]

Now I fear 'twill be my heart
That will weep when we must part.

SNOW WHITE. [Embarrassed.]

Now we turn and bow. Dear me!
You don't know this dance, I see.

THE PRINCE.

Can I think to bow and turn
When I'm learning what I learn?

[The Dance ends, and a trumpet sounds to announce the coming of the QUEEN.

SCENE I

*But the PRINCE still holds SNOW
WHITE's hand.*

SNOW WHITE.

There's the trumpet! I must fly!
Please, my hand, sir, and—good-bye!

THE PRINCE. [Detaining her.]

I don't even know your name!
Don't go yet—I'll take the blame!

SNOW WHITE.

Oh, I can't, nor tell you why!
Please! I beg you! Let me fly!

[And she runs off, surrounded by the MAIDS OF HONOUR who have been terribly frightened lest the QUEEN should spy her.

THE PRINCE. [Gazing after her.]

Do you think to steal my heart,
Little thief, and so depart?
Nay, I'll follow, fast and true,
Till I find my heart and you!

[SIR DANDIPRAT appears on the terrace.

SNOW WHITE

SIR DANDIPRAT. [Announcing.] Her Majesty the Queen!

[To a crash of music and blare of trumpets QUEEN BRANGOMAR enters. She is dark, languorous and very beautiful. She wears her crown; and her long robes are embroidered in the blues and greens of the peacock's tail. She holds out a jewelled hand for PRINCE FLORIMOND to kiss, and then sweeps to the throne.

THE QUEEN. So you are Prince Florimond? I'm sorry you chose to-day to come. I'm not looking my best.

THE PRINCE. [Politely.] I have always heard of Queen Brangomar as the most beautiful . . .

THE QUEEN. [Interrupting rudely.] Of course, of course! I am told you bring me a message from your father. What is it?

THE PRINCE. This letter. I don't know its contents, your Majesty.

THE QUEEN. [Reading the letter.] Your

SCENE I

father writes that if you did know it might embarrass you. M-m-m-m-m . . . wretched handwriting. "My son Florimond, now of an age to marry . . ."

THE PRINCE. [Startled.] Marry?

THE QUEEN. So your foolish old father is intending to marry you off, is he? I hope he isn't thinking of me. How many proposals would that make this week, Dandiprat?

SIR DANDIPRAT. Eleven, your Majesty—including those from the lunatic asylums.

THE QUEEN. [Still reading.] What's this? To "his cousin the Princess Snow White"! To Snow White! [She rises in anger, crushing the letter.] To Snow White! [Then, trying not to betray her jealousy, and with a bitter laugh, she reseats herself.] Really, my dear Florimond! of course I regret to say so, but Snow White isn't a possible choice. I'm sorry to disappoint you.

THE PRINCE. [Interrupting.] But you don't, I . . .

S N O W W H I T E

THE QUEEN. I was speaking! Snow White is most malicious and ill-tempered; and so stupid and common that she prefers to associate with kitchen-maids. Indeed, I believe she's in the kitchen at this very moment. She wouldn't do for you at all. Are not these the facts, Sir Dandiprat?

SIR DANDIPRAT. [Hesitating.] Well, your Majesty, . . . perhaps . . .

THE QUEEN. [Sternly.] Are not these the facts, Sir Dandiprat?

SIR DANDIPRAT. [Crushed.] They are, your Majesty.

THE PRINCE. Your Majesty has made me very happy!

THE QUEEN. Happy? I supposed . . .

THE PRINCE. Five minutes ago such an account of Snow White would have made me miserable, for even as a little boy I always dreamed of marrying my cousin when I grew up. But now—oh, will your Majesty help me if I confess?

SCENE I

THE QUEEN. Help you? How?

THE PRINCE. You see I've fallen in love with some one else meantime.

THE QUEEN. Meantime? When?

THE PRINCE. Here, just now, in this very room. She is the most beautiful . . .

THE QUEEN. [With a pleased laugh.] Oh, my poor boy! Really, I'm so much older than you . . .

THE PRINCE. [With boyish frankness.] Oh, not your Majesty. She's one of Snow White's Maids of Honour.

THE QUEEN. A Maid of Honour? You don't mean to say you want to marry one of them! Your father would never consent. They're nice girls, and come of quite respectable families—daughters of dukes and earls and that class—but you can only marry a Princess.

THE PRINCE. I'd marry her without my father's consent, even if we had to set up house-keeping in a poor cottage!

S N O W W H I T E

THE QUEEN. Don't be heroic! What is the young paragon's name?

THE PRINCE. She . . . she didn't tell me. We danced together, that was all.

THE QUEEN. [Sarcastically.] Are you quite sure you would even know her again?

THE PRINCE. Your Majesty is unkind!

THE QUEEN. Apparently the only way to discover the young person is to summon all the Maids of Honour. [She motions SIR DANDIPRAT, who hurries off.] I am curious to know your taste. Stand here by me and point her out when she comes.

[SIR DANDIPRAT reappears in the doorway and introduces the MAIDS OF HONOUR, one by one. As each MAID is named she curtsies to the PRINCE.]

SIR DANDIPRAT. The Maids of Honour. The Lady Rosalys. The Lady Amelotte. The Lady Ermengarde. The Lady Guinivere. The Lady Christabel. The Lady Astolaine. The Lady Ursula. The Lady Linnette.

SCENE I

THE PRINCE. [After a pause of astonishment.]
But she's not there! There was another—!

THE QUEEN. Another?
Eight—that is all.

SIR DANDIPRAT. [Counting his fingers.] Only eight, your Highness.

THE PRINCE. But there was another!

THE QUEEN. [Suspiciously.] Another? What was she like?

THE PRINCE. Her hair was black as polished ebony, her skin was whiter than new fallen snow, her lips were redder than a drop of blood!

THE QUEEN. [In a terrible voice.] Snow
White! Summon Snow White!

[SNOW WHITE appears timidly in the entrance. I suspect she had been listening behind the curtains.

SNOW WHITE. I am here, your Majesty.

SNOW WHITE

THE PRINCE. That is she! And oh, she is Snow White! You are Snow White! [He rushes to kneel at her feet.]

THE QUEEN. [Her anger quite overcoming her as she sees SNOW WHITE's changed appearance.] Snow White! You! you dared! [She rushes toward the little PRINCESS, but suddenly, half way, she falters and falls fainting.]

SIR DANDIPRAT. [Hopping about in great excitement.] The Queen has fainted! The Queen has fainted! Oh, this is most important! Princess, Princess, see what you've done! Take her away, take her away! [The MAIDS OF HONOUR lead SNOW WHITE away; and SIR DANDIPRAT turns to the astonished PRINCE.] Most deplorable! Would your Highness withdraw to the terrace until the Queen recovers? It's most distracting. Air, air! Out of the room, everybody! Give her air!

[The PRINCE and the COURTIERS hurry out of the room. But no sooner is the

SCENE I

QUEEN alone with SIR DANDIPRAT than she recovers from her swoon.

SIR DANDIPRAT. Shall I fan your Majesty?
Oh, I hope . . .

THE QUEEN. Where is the Prince?

SIR DANDIPRAT. Waiting on the terrace, your Majesty.

THE QUEEN. Keep him there till I ring.

SIR DANDIPRAT. Oh, pray don't anger him!
Gain time! Gain time!

THE QUEEN. Get out, you idiot! [This rude exclamation so startles SIR DANDIPRAT that he stumbles backwards up the terrace steps, and waddles out of sight as fast as his fat legs will carry him.]

THE QUEEN. [Alone.] The Witch! Witch Hex! I must summon her. She must help me now. [She draws the curtains over both entrances so that she may not be seen at her magic.] What was the spell! Ah, I remember! [In a hushed mysterious voice she chants.]

THE SPELL

From my eyebrow pluck a hair,

Blow it high up in the air,

E—burrimee hock.

Where it lands a circle trace,

E—burrimee boo-row.

Three times pace about the space,

And

Knock, knock, knock!

[As she knocks smoke rises from the circle she has traced, and there is a sound of distant thunder.

Thunder says the spell grows warm,

E—burrimee boo-row.

Now I speak the mystic Charm,

E—burrimee boo!

THE CHARM

Ee, Eye-sof-o-gos. Ee, Eye-sof-a-giddle!

Ee, Eye-sof-o-gos. Ee, Eye-sof-a-giddle.

SCENE I

Ee, Eye-sof-o-gos!

Ee, Eye-sof-o-lof-o-gos!

Ee, Eye-sof-o-gos!

Ee, Eye-sof-a-giddle!

[The Charm sounds like nonsense; but it must be true magic, for the smoke increases as she chants it, and the thunder comes nearer.

The spell's wound up, the charm is clear!

I summon thee, Witch Hex, appear!

[Lo! through the smoking circle in the floor, WITCH HEX does appear. She looks exactly like all witches in fairy-tale pictures, with her black, pointed hat, red cloak, and crutched stick. It is evident that she is in a bad temper.

THE WITCH. Here, help me out, help me out!

[The QUEEN assists her out of the smoking circle.]

What's the meaning of this? I'm getting tired of being called up by you night and day. Last time I was in my night-gown, and it was snowing too. I was an idiot to teach you that spell. Whatever is the trouble now?

S N O W W H I T E

THE QUEEN. Don't be angry, dear godmother. You know how much I love you!

THE WITCH. Stuff! You don't love me. You dont' love anybody but yourself. That's the matter with you. If you only knew the trouble I have to take to keep you beautiful! Your disposition keeps wearing through. If I should once say, "Bang! no more charms for that wretched Brangomar," how would you look then? [She chuckles at the thought.] I believe you'd be uglier than I am.

THE QUEEN. I know, I know, dear Hex, but you wouldn't!

THE WITCH. Don't be too sure. Just summon me once too often, and you may find out how it feels to be the ugliest woman in the Seven Kingdoms.

THE QUEEN. Oh, tell me I am still the most beautiful!

THE WITCH. You look all right to me. But I warn you. I'm using my strongest magic now. You'd be much safer if you'd try to be good once in a while. Well, whom are you jealous of this time?

S C E N E I

THE QUEEN. Snow White.

THE WITCH. Snow White? She's only a child!

THE QUEEN. So I thought till to-day, when I saw her for the first time prettily dressed.

THE WITCH. Well, why in the name of my cat Fiddle, did you dress her up?

THE QUEEN. I didn't. She tricked me.

THE WITCH. Who thought she was fairer than you?

THE QUEEN. Prince Florimond. He wants to marry her.

THE WITCH. Prince Florimond? Pooh! Mere boy! Probably said it to plague you, knowing your wretched disposition. But I've brought something with me this time that may help to keep you quiet. Just had time to snatch it when I felt you spelling away. It's a Magic Mirror.

SNOW WHITE

[She takes from her pocket and holds before QUEEN BRANGOMAR's dazzled eyes a hand mirror, carved from a single crystal. It glows and gleams like an opal.

THE QUEEN. [Seizing the Mirror and gazing into it.] Magic! . . . [But suddenly she cries out in horror.] Oh!

THE WITCH. Ah, you see! Reflects you as you really are. If I stopped my spells that's what you'd look like. Now it makes me quite decent looking. That's because my character's better.

THE QUEEN. Oh, the hateful thing! I never saw anything so terrible. Why, I looked almost funny! Take it away! Take it away!

THE WITCH. Wait! That's not all its magic. Hold it in your hand and say:

Mirror, Mirror, in my hand,
Who's the fairest in the land?

and it will answer truthfully.

THE QUEEN. [Snatching the Mirror, but shut-

S C E N E I

*ting her eyes that she may not see her reflection.]
Oh, let me try!*

Mirror, Mirror, in my hand,
Who's the fairest in the land?

THE WITCH. Listen!

*[There is a faint strain of music, and then a clear far-away voice that sounds like

THE MIRROR'S SONG

You who hold me in your hand,
You were fairest in the land;
But, to-day, I tell you true,
Snow White is more fair than you!

[With a scream of rage the Queen would dash the Mirror to the floor, but the Witch rescues it just in time.

THE WITCH. Stop! Stop! Stop! Gracious!
Listen to me, now. If you ever break that Mirror you will become as ugly as you really are—and for life, too! None of my spells can beauty you again either, for the Mirror is made with those same charms. [Scornfully.] I thought you knew enough common, every-day magic for that!

THE QUEEN. [Pacing up and down, weeping with rage.] But Snow White is more beautiful than I! Snow White is more beautiful than I!

THE WITCH. [Mocking her.] Snow White is more beau-hoo-hoo-tiful than I? Stop that wauling.

S N O W W H I T E

THE QUEEN. But I can't bear it! Oh, make a spell and turn her ugly—as ugly as a toad!

THE WITCH. Won't! Refuse to make any more bad spells. If you can't bear the sight of her why not send her away somewhere,—say to boarding-school.

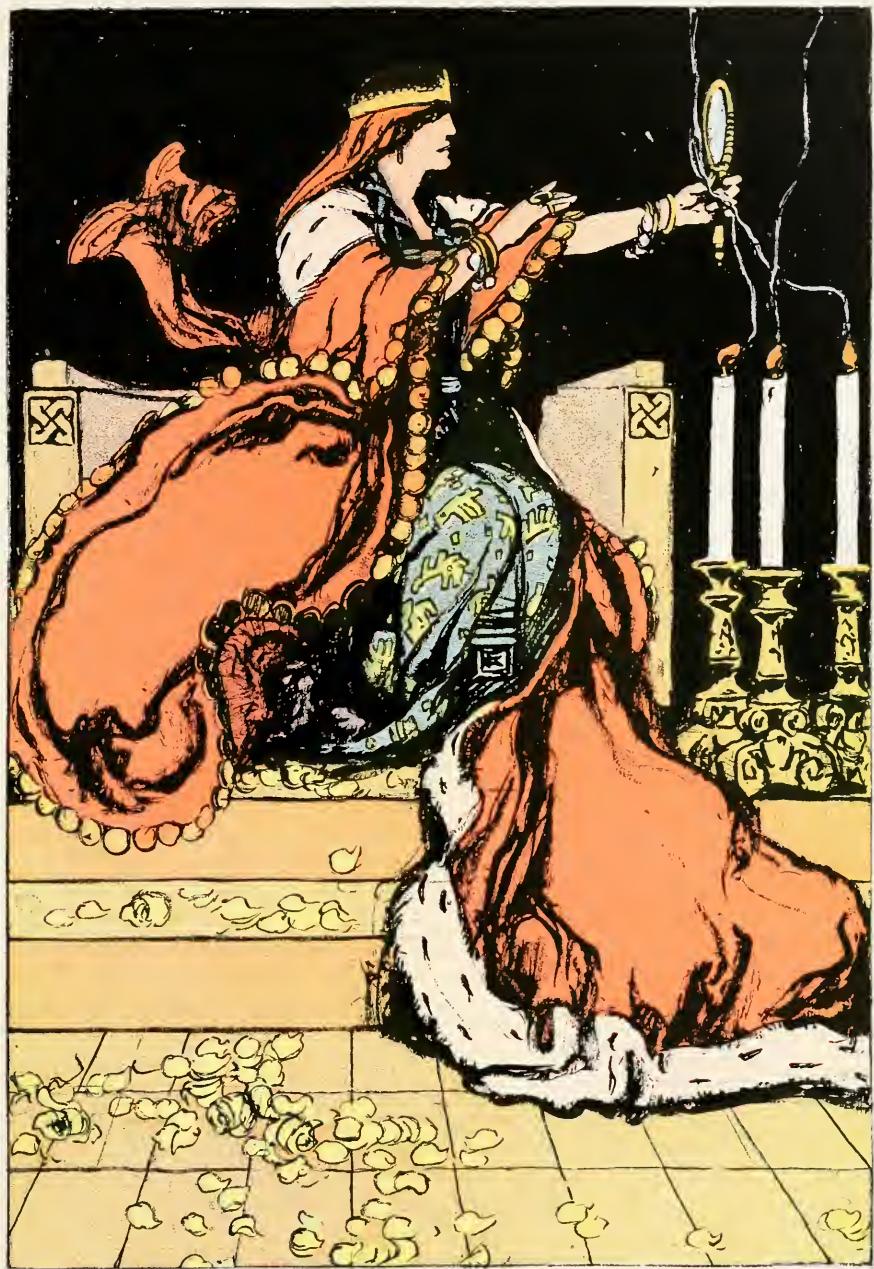

THE QUEEN. But she'd come back.

THE WITCH. Why should she? Suppose at boarding-school she gets mumps or freckles, or whatever those children's diseases are, and dies of it.

THE QUEEN. Oh, I see! You'll make a spell and give her the disease.

THE WITCH. No, no, no! Won't do any more bad magic, I tell you. You must contrive to have her lost on the way to boarding-school, and then just tell some tarradiddle to explain why she never comes back—and there you are! Everything permanently settled, and a little peace for me I hope.

THE QUEEN. I might! I could send Berthold,

"MIRROR, MIRROR IN MY HAND, WHO'S THE FAIREST IN THE LAND?"

S C E N E I

my Huntsman, as if he were taking her to school, and then . . . oh! . . . in the deep forest . . . [She whispers,] he shall put her to death!

THE WITCH. [Starting.] Goodness-gracious-mercy-me! I never suggested anything like that! Why I hear she's quite a nice child.

THE QUEEN. I shall never know a happy hour while she's alive!

THE WITCH. Well, there's no arguing with you. But can you trust your Huntsman?

THE QUEEN. I know a way to make him obey.

THE WITCH. Glad you know something! And look here, if you're resolved to have Snow White killed there's a little favour you might do me. I'm making a new spell that is really hard magic,—a hair restorer that will really restore hair. Want it for my own personal use. [She pops off her cap and shows a perfectly bald head.] I'd about given it up for want of the last ingredient—the heart of a nice young girl. Now I wouldn't harm a nice young girl myself for anything; but if you're determined to dispose of Snow White I'd be obliged for her heart.

S N O W W H I T E

THE QUEEN. I promise. Berthold shall bring it to me as a proof. And now good-bye, dear Hexy. I must summon him at once.

THE WITCH. Hm! It's always, "Good-bye, dear Hexy," as soon as I've done what you want. I'm afraid you don't love me for myself alone, dear Brangomary! But I'm as glad to go as you are to have me. Say the "Quick Spell" and get me off. Ready!

[The Queen and the Witch join hands, shut their eyes and chant in chorus.

THE QUICK SPELL

THE QUEEN and WITCH.

Bangaboo-bar;
Bangaboo whack;
Crow eat sun,
Make all black!

Mar-oom-bah!

[Everything suddenly becomes black. In the darkness the two voices are still heard, chanting:

S C E N E I

Bangaboo-bar;
Bangaboo-whack;
Mole dig hole,
Witch go back,
Mar-oom-bah!

[There is a queer sound, something like a very small earthquake. Then only the QUEEN's voice is heard.

THE QUEEN.

Bangaboo-bah;
Bangaboo whack;
Witch is gone,
Sun come back,
Mar-oom-bah!

[The light returns as suddenly as it went. The WITCH has vanished. Quite calmly the QUEEN goes to the bell-cord.

THE QUEEN. Let me see. I ring three times for the Huntsman. [She rings; but it is SIR DANDI-PRAT who enters.]

S N O W W H I T E

SIR DANDIPRAT. Your Majesty rang for me?

THE QUEEN. Not for you, idiot, for Berthold. Give me a minute alone with him and then summon the Prince and Snow White. Off with you!

[SIR DANDIPRAT hurries away, just as CHIEF HUNTSMAN BERTHOLD enters. BERTHOLD is tall and big. He has a thick, square beard and a kind, ruddy face.

THE QUEEN. Berthold, I have a task for you.

BERTHOLD. I hope it is to take you a-hunting, your Majesty. Your forests are full of game, wild pigs, deer—indeed there may be even a unicorn or two.

THE QUEEN. It's other game I propose this time, Berthold. You have been a faithful Chief Huntsman. Suppose I promote you to be Lord High Admiral? As we have no navy the duties will be light.

BERTHOLD. Oh, your Majesty, how can I thank you?

S C E N E I

THE QUEEN. It depends upon your carrying out a task with absolute obedience.

BERTHOLD. Give me a chance to show my gratitude.

THE QUEEN. Come nearer. The Princess Snow White is to set out for boarding-school this afternoon. You will conduct her. At the western gates, you will take the old road that turns to the left . . .

BERTHOLD. But, your Majesty, that road leads into the deep wood.

THE QUEEN. You will take that road. When you have come to the very heart of the forest—then [and she hisses the words] you will kill the Princess.

BERTHOLD. [Springing back.] Never, your Majesty, never!

THE QUEEN. It is my command. She has disobeyed me. She must be punished.

BERTHOLD. Kill Snow White? My late King's daughter, the loveliest maid in the Seven Kingdoms? I would slay myself first! There is no man in your dominions base enough to do such a deed. Pray dismiss me! [He turns to go.]

THE QUEEN. [In a terrible voice.] Wait! I have a surer means to command your obedience. You have six small children I believe?

BERTHOLD. [Wonderingly.] Yes, your Majesty.

THE QUEEN. Suppose I lock your six children in the great Grey Tower. Suppose I order that no one shall take them food or drink.

BERTHOLD. Oh, your Majesty, have mercy!

THE QUEEN. Think! Can you not hear their six small voices calling to you from the dark. "We are hungry, Papa," they will cry; and they will beat on the door with their little hands.

BERTHOLD. [Sinking to the ground.] Spare me! Spare me!

THE QUEEN. At last they will be too weak to cry or beat. Then, when all has grown still within the Tower, I will say, ‘‘Berthold, here is the key. Go and see how Queen Brangomar punishes disobedience.’’

SCENE I

BERTHOLD. [Rising, with a cry.] Oh, I will obey, your Majesty! Heaven forgive me, but I cannot let my children starve!

THE QUEEN. That’s much better, Berthold. You understand clearly?

BERTHOLD. Alas! Too well!

THE QUEEN. Oh, what a tone of voice. Remember the motto: ‘‘A task cheerfully done is well done.’’ And, oh, I almost forgot. You must bring me Snow White’s heart, before midnight, as a proof. Here comes the Prince. Do try to look more pleasant.

[PRINCE FLORIMOND returns, ushered in by SIR DANDIPRAT, and followed by all the COURTIERS.

THE PRINCE. I hope your Majesty has recovered.

THE QUEEN. Quite, thank you. I beg everybody's pardon. Something I had for lunch, no doubt. [To SIR DANDIPRAT.] Where is the Princess Snow White?

SNOW WHITE. [Appearing.] I am here, your Majesty.

THE QUEEN. My dear Snow White, Prince Florimond has come to ask your hand in marriage. What do you say?

SNOW WHITE. [Drooping her head.] What may I say?

THE QUEEN. Have you any reasons against it?

SNOW WHITE. [Softly.] None, your Majesty.

THE QUEEN. I was obliged to tell him how unfitted you are at present to become a Queen. Indeed, I've long been thinking of sending you away to some select boarding-school for backward Princesses. This seems the opportunity. You will remain at the school for a year and a day.

SCENE I

THE PRINCE. [Exclaiming.] Oh, your Majesty!

THE QUEEN. [Firmly.] And the Prince must promise not to see or write to you until the end of that time.

THE PRINCE. That seems too hard!

THE QUEEN. Otherwise, I shall refuse my consent. Do you agree?

THE PRINCE. Since I must.

THE QUEEN. Then that's settled! Return here one year and one day hence, and we can then [and here she means more than she says,] discuss the engagement. Now, Snow White, bid farewell to Prince Florimond. [The PRINCE starts forward to kiss SNOW WHITE's hand, but the QUEEN intervenes.] No, no! A respectful bow, and a curtsey, will be quite sufficient. Good-bye, Florimond. Hasten back to your father.

[So poor PRINCE FLORIMOND bows himself out, followed by his PAGES; but he looks back at SNOW WHITE as long as he can see her.

THE QUEEN. [Continuing.] Now, Snow White, I've arranged all the details about the boarding-school. You must leave immediately or you won't arrive before night-fall. Berthold will conduct you. Say your good-byes quickly.

SNOW WHITE. Thank you so much, your Majesty, I'm not quite sure that I want to be a queen, but I should like to be a well-educated princess. I'm very grateful. [She tries to take the QUEEN's hand, but the QUEEN withdraws it hastily.]

THE QUEEN. You are keeping Berthold waiting.

Off with you at once.

SNOW WHITE. [Turning to her MAIDS OF HONOUR.] Good-bye, my little playmates! Good-bye,

S C E N E I

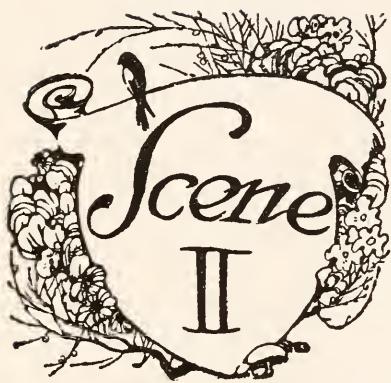

Amelotte and Ermengarde and Christabel and Rosalys. Don't cry, Rosalys, it will only be a year; and I promise not to come back so grown-up and princessy that you won't recognise your Snow White. Good-bye, dear ladies and gentlemen who have all been so good to me. I kiss you all!

[She blows them a kiss. Then, slipping her little hand into Berthold's big one, she says:

Now Berthold!

[And BERTHOLD and the PRINCESS SNOW WHITE go off along the terrace toward the deep forest as

THE CURTAIN FALLS

IN THE FOREST

*Great trees meet over a wild and overgrown path.
It is after sunset, and the light is fading fast. A small BROWN BIRD flies above the path, chirping a little call, and perches in a tree just out of sight.
SNOW WHITE running gaily, follows the BIRD.*

SNOW WHITE. Yes, little brown bird, I hear you. You want another answer? Wait until I get my breath. [She whistles an imitation of the bird's call.] What? Flying on again, as soon as you've made sure I've heard? Where are you trying to lead us? [She calls back to BERTHOLD.] Berthold, there's the brown bird again. He seems to be trying to get me to follow him. He's perched on that tree now waiting for me to come up. [The

SNOW WHITE

BIRD calls again, and SNOW WHITE tries to imitate the call in words.] “Come, Snow White, come, Snow White!” Is that what you are trying to say? I’m coming! I’m coming! [And she runs on, following the BIRD.]

[BERTHOLD comes into sight. As he sees how lonely the spot is, and how dark with the shadows of the great trees, he halts irresolutely and murmurs to himself.]

BERTHOLD. It may as well be here as anywhere. Mile after mile you have put it off till the next turn or some more shadowed spot. But that is no kindness to the Princess. Remember your own children, man! It must be here! [He calls after SNOW WHITE—and his voice is hoarse.] Princess! Come back!

SNOW WHITE. [Answering.] What is it, Berthold? You want me? [She runs back and slips her hand into his.] There’s the bird again. He seems to know the way better than you do. Do you think he can know that I’m going to boarding-school? [The bird calls again, and she answers,] Don't be so impatient! I shall stay with Berthold just as long as I like! He's a much older friend of mine than you are. What did you want, Berthold?

BERTHOLD. Oh, dear Princess . . . [But he cannot go on.]

SNOW WHITE. Why are you so pale? Have you hurt yourself? [She tries to take his hand again, but he draws it away.] Oh, you're angry with me? Something I did or said hurt your feelings? I didn't mean to. Please forgive me!

BERTHOLD. Forgive you, Princess! [He kneels before her, and cries out in anguish.] Say you can forgive me!

SNOW WHITE. [Wonderingly.] Forgive you? For what? [She tries to raise his bowed head, that she may see his face.] What is it, Berthold?

BERTHOLD. Don't look at me, Princess! Don't look at me! [He folds his arms about her, and hides his face in her dress.]

SNOW WHITE

SNOW WHITE. Oh, whatever it is, tell me!
I'm afraid!

BERTHOLD. The Queen . . .

SNOW WHITE. The Queen?

BERTHOLD. The Queen . . . has commanded me to . . . kill you . . . here . . . in this forest
. . . now!

SNOW WHITE. [Looking down at him in wonder.] Kill me? I don't understand. You're taking me to school! . . . Oh, you're joking! I call that a silly joke, stupid old Berthold—a very silly joke. Look at me! No, look at me! [Slowly he raises his head. She reads the truth in his face, and with a cry springs from him.] Oh, it's true, it's true! I know it! That was why the Queen . . .! But you won't, will you? See, Berthold, I don't run away.

S C E N E I I

I come right to you. I creep into your arms. You won't hurt me, will you?

BERTHOLD. Oh, my darling! If it were my life alone that were at stake I would suffer any torture rather than harm a hair of your beloved head. But the Queen . . .

SNOW WHITE. Oh, you mean—that the Queen will kill you, unless . . .?

BERTHOLD. Not me, Princess, but my children. She has shut them up in the Grey Tower, and she will starve them to death . . .

SNOW WHITE. Oh, Berthold! [Then after a little pause, she goes on softly.] I know your little children. They have blue eyes and yellow hair. I've played with them. She would do it, too. [She thinks a moment; then with sudden resolution, goes on.] Kiss me good-bye, Berthold. I couldn't live and think of your children. See, I'm not crying—I'm not even very frightened. I'll turn away and shut my eyes. But please be quick!

SNOW WHITE

BERTHOLD. [Staggers to his feet and makes a fumbling movement for his knife; but as he touches it he sinks down again with a cry.] I cannot, Princess, I cannot!

SNOW WHITE. But you must, Berthold! How else can you save your children?

BERTHOLD. [Sobbing.] I will find some way—some way.

SNOW WHITE. No, it's not possible, Berthold!

BERTHOLD. It's not possible for me to—kill—your Highness.

[There is a silence.]

SNOW WHITE. Berthold, considering the way the Queen has behaved do you think it would be very wrong to tell her a story?

BERTHOLD. [Dazed.] Wrong?

SNOW WHITE. Because if it weren't wrong, mightn't you tell her that you'd killed me without doing it?

S C E N E I I

BERTHOLD. But the proof! She has commanded me to bring her your—heart—before midnight.

SNOW WHITE. My heart? I've never seen a heart. I don't suppose a little piece of beef-steak would look at all like it, would it?

BERTHOLD. No, but . . . [He springs up.] Why not the heart of some beast! I might catch a wild pig here in the forest, and . . . [Suddenly his voice drops.] But no! I couldn't leave you here alone. You would starve.

SNOW WHITE. Couldn't I live like the birds, on berries?

BERTHOLD. But the winter will come—and—oh, your Highness, there are savage beasts in this wood.

SNOW WHITE. I haven't seen one;—not a living creature but my little brown bird.

BERTHOLD. It was daytime and I was with you; but it is growing dark, and at night . . .

S N O W W H I T E

SNOW WHITE. But if you don't take the heart to the Queen before midnight you know what she will do. The most savage beast would be less cruel. And you must catch the wild pig before it is too dark to see.

BERTHOLD. No! I dare not leave your Highness!

SNOW WHITE. [Pretending to be struck with a new idea.] Berthold, could you find this place again?

BERTHOLD. Find it? Every inch of the way is branded on my brain!

SNOW WHITE. Then to-morrow hide some food in your tunic and come back again, and we can plan. You might build me a little hut, and bring me food every day like a mother-bird, and I could live a little lone forest Princess.

BERTHOLD. [Slowly.] I might . . . but . . .

SNOW WHITE. Oh, please! There is no other hope, is there?

SCENE II

BERTHOLD. None that I can see.

SNOW WHITE. Then hurry. It's getting darker every moment. Kiss me good-bye quickly. [She puts her face up to his.] Until to-morrow, dear Berthold!

BERTHOLD. My Princess! Heaven keep you! Until to-morrow!

[He hastens away.]

SNOW WHITE. [Calling after him.] Good-bye, dearest Berthold!

[Then, to herself.] Poor Berthold, does he think the Queen will ever let him out of her sight again? No, she will shut him up in prison for fear that he might tell. He will never come back! Good-bye forever, Berthold! [A sudden terror seizes her.] Oh, it's good-bye forever, everybody! [She starts after him, crying,]

Berthold, come back, come back! [But remembering, she clasps her hands over her mouth to stifle the cry.] Hush! Snow White! Think of his children, think of his children! [With a little moan, she sinks to the ground.] But what shall I do? Where shall I go? I'm afraid—I'm afraid—afraid! [And she hides her face among the leaves.]

[The call of the little BROWN BIRD is heard almost overhead. At first SNOW WHITE does not hear, and the BIRD repeats the cry that sounds almost like "Come, Snow White!"]

SNOW WHITE. [Looking up in wonder.] Oh little bird, are you still here? You haven't left me. I think you are my friend—the only friend I have in all this world now. [The BIRD flies off a little way and then perches and repeats his call.] Are you telling me to follow you, as you did before? But where shall I follow? I have nowhere to go. I wish I might live in your nest, little bird. [Again the BIRD calls and SNOW WHITE rises and follows where he flies.] Yes, I will follow, I trust you. [She runs out of sight among the trees, calling softly as she goes.] I hear! I am coming! I am following, little brown bird!

S C E N E I I

THE CURTAIN FALLS

IN THE HOUSE OF THE SEVEN DWARFS

The Dwarfs' House is very tiny. It is built of rough stones and logs, and niched into a hillside in the depths of the great wood. It has but one room, two windows and a half door. Along one side of the room are ranged seven little beds of different sizes; on the other is a stone fireplace for cooking, and a rustic pump with a barrel under its spout to catch the water. In the middle of the stone floor stands a low table with seven places laid for supper. A single candle on the table lights the room. Through the window we see the forest, dim in the moonlight.

Presently the little BROWN BIRD flies past, and perches on a branch just outside, still calling SNOW WHITE to follow him. They have come a long way and she is very tired and hungry. But, as she sees the little house, and realises at last where the BROWN BIRD was leading her, she runs up and peeps in through the window.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, was it toward this light you were leading me, brown bird? Why, it's a little house! Are you flying away now? Please let me thank you first:—see, I blow you a kiss! He's gone. Perhaps birds don't like kisses; their faces are so sharp. [Calling after him.] Good-bye, little friend! [She looks cautiously through the window into the house.] What a queer little room! Seven beds and all so small. There must be lots of children in the family. Nobody with so many children could be wicked. [She calls.] May I come in? [As there is no answer she knocks at the door and then opens it a crack.] Please, good people, may I come in to rest—just for a moment? I'm lost in the forest. [Still no answer. She creeps into the room and looks about.] Nobody at home. But they couldn't mind if I sat down, just a minute. Oh, there is the children's

"I WISH I MIGHT LIVE IN YOUR NEST, LITTLE BIRD"

S C E N E III

supper, all laid out. I'm so hungry! If I took just a bit—only a tiny bit—from each place, I'm sure they couldn't be angry. [She goes to the table, and as she nibbles a morsel at each place she sings to herself.]

EATING SONG

A sip of water from this cup,
Of porridge just one tiny sup.
I'll take this little knife to spread,
A corner of the next one's bread;
And borrow this wee fork to break
A morsel from this barley cake.
I'll take one cherry from these four,—
But not a single mouthful more,
No, not a single mouthful more!

SNOW WHITE. Nobody could begrudge me that. But I'd like to do something to pay for my supper. [She looks about.] There's plenty to be done. It isn't at all a tidy house. [She yawns, and then shaking herself.] Wake up, Snow White! You mustn't get sleepy yet; not till the people come home. [But she cannot quite stifle another yawn.] There's a broom. Suppose I sweep a little. [She begins to sweep, but the broom raises such a cloud of dust, that, coughing, she has to stop at once.] Dear me, that only makes things worse. This floor needs a good scrubbing. I might make up the beds. [She goes to the biggest bed; but she is so tired that she sits down on it a moment before beginning.] This one looks as if it hadn't been made for years and years and years. I wonder if it's as humpy to lie on as it is to sit on. [She lies down to try it.] Oh, it's more . . . It's humpy and bumpy . . . and bumpy and humpy . . . and . . . [Her voice trails away into silence. She has fallen asleep.]

[For a time all is quiet in the little room. Then, from far underground is a sound of distant knocking. It comes nearer till it sounds just under the house. Finally a great stone slab in the floor is pushed up slowly, and from an underground passage that leads from the house into the deep mines, six of the SEVEN DWARFS clamber up into sight.

Their names are BLICK, FLICK, GLICK, SNICK, PLICK and WHICK. They are very small—the tallest hardly above your waist—but they are extremely old, and their beards are long and grey. Each carries a lighted lantern and a pickaxe, and bears a heavy sack over his shoulder. As soon as the last one has climbed into the room they form in line, with BLICK, the eldest, at the head.

BLICK. Now, brothers, evening roll-call! [He calls his own name.] Blick [And answers.] Here! [Then he calls each of the others by name—] “Flick!” “Glick!” “Snick!” “Plick!” “Whick!” [Last of all BLICK calls.] Quee! [There is no answer. He repeats.] Quee! [Still no answer. BLICK shakes his head sadly.] Late as usual! He’s been stealing again. Whatever shall we do with that boy? [All the DWARFS sigh and hang their heads with shame at QUEE’s conduct. But BLICK goes on.] Well, brothers, what result of to-day’s work? Half a ton of gold nuggets for mine. [He takes a handful of enormous nuggets from his sack. The others also exhibit their treasures as they name them.]

FLICK. A hundred weight of silver dust.

GLICK. Fifty pounds of diamonds.

SNICK. A bushel of rubies.

PLICK. A gallon of emeralds.

[99]

S N O W W H I T E

WHICK. A peck of opals.

BLICK. Fair, fair! But we ought to work longer hours.

FLICK. Yes, what's the good of coming home—except to sleep.

GLICK. And have supper.

FLICK. [With scorn.] Oh, that supper!

BLICK. I know, I know! It's wretched. If we cook it at night it's too hot to eat; if we cook it in the morning it's cold and dusty by night; but what else can we do?

GLICK. And I'd rather sleep underground than in those beds.

ALL. So would we!

BLICK. I know! They haven't been made for twelve years. But it doesn't pay to take time from digging diamonds to make beds, so what can we do?

ALL. [Sighing.] Nothing.

FROM AN UNDERGROUND PASSAGE . . . SIX OF THE SEVEN DWARFS CLAMBER UP INTO SIGHT

S C E N E III

SNICK. But if we didn't come home to supper we wouldn't have to wash.

BLICK. [Shocked.] Oh, brothers! Washing is a duty. Hush! I think I hear Quee. [They all cock their heads sidewise like robins and listen.] Yes, that's Quee. He has been stealing again! We must scold him soundly.

FLICK. It never does any good.

BLICK. But we must bring him up in the way he should go. He is the youngest of us; he's only ninety-nine next April. Clear away and ready for him.

[They pile their sacks in a corner, and squat on the floor in a semi-circle, with BLICK, like a presiding judge, in the centre.

[QUEE creeps up stealthily through the underground passage. He is much the smallest, but grey bearded like the rest. As he faces his brothers, one finger creeps.

S N O W W H I T E

into his mouth. BLICK greets him sternly.

BLICK. Quee, you are late again! [QUEE nods.] Been stealing as usual, I suppose? [QUEE nods.]

ALL. [Shaking their fingers at him, reprovingly.] Oh!

BLICK. You know it's wrong!

ALL. Very, very wrong! [QUEE nods.]

BLICK. Did anybody catch you at it? [QUEE shakes his head.] That's good—as far as it goes.

FLICK. Did you get me a mouse-trap? [QUEE nods.]

GLICK. And my candles? [QUEE nods.]

FLICK. And a pin? [QUEE nods.] I'm glad of that. I've never seen a pin.

BLICK. Of course you understand, Quee, that stealing is a sin, and that your conduct makes us very sad?

SCENE III

ALL. Very, very sad!

BLICK. Will you promise to reform, and never, never steal again . . . ?

F L I C K. [Interrupting hastily.] Wait, wait! Give him the list of things to get to-morrow first!

BLICK. Dear me, I almost forgot! Quee, tie a string around your finger to remember by. Now, what do you all want?

THE DWARFS. [Speaking in rapid succession; each names one article.]

A chain. A plane. A weather-vane.

A hat. A mat. A pussy-cat.

A pound of brass.

A pane of glass.

A crock. A lock. An eight-day clock.

A can. A pan. A palm-leaf fan.

A tack. A sack. An almanac.

A can of soup.

A chicken-coop.

A map. A cap. A snappy trap.

A pole. A bowl. A baker's roll.

A rake. A cake. A pound of steak.

A peck of meal.

A pickled eel.

A slate. A plate. A ten-pound weight.

BLICK. That's all for to-morrow. But remember, young man, if "it's a sin to steal a pin" how much worse it must be to steal a ten-pound weight. You appreciate that? [QUEE nods sadly.] Brothers, we shall have to correct him again to-morrow night. He is incorrigible.

ALL. [Mournfully.] In-cor-rig-ible!

BLICK. Now for the evening washing. Get the basin, Quee.

[Glad that his daily scolding is over, QUEE runs cheerfully and fetches a basin of water, a big sponge and a towel.

BLICK. No flinching now, brothers. Line up!

SCENE III

Right faces! [They all, except QUEE, stand close together, and thrust their faces over one another's shoulders, with eyes closed. Running down the line, QUEE washes all their right cheeks with one long sweep of his sponge.] Reverse! [cries BLICK. They all turn and face in the opposite direction; and QUEE, running up the line, washes all their other cheeks.] Right faces! [cries BLICK. With a single sweep of his towel, QUEE now dries all their right cheeks; and when BLICK commands "Reverse," he dries the opposite sides in the same neat and speedy way. And the evening washing is finished.]

BLICK. There! That's over for another twenty-four hours.

ALL. Thank goodness!

BLICK. Oh come! It's quick and comparatively painless. Only—Quee gets dirtier and dirtier every year.

FLICK. But somebody must do it.

S N O W W H I T E

GLICK. He's the youngest.

WHICK. It's his duty.

BLICK. Nevertheless he's a disgrace to the family. [QUEE bows his head in shame.] I'm glad that you realise it, at least.

GLICK. And now [with a heavy sigh] supper!

ALL. [Sadly.] Supper!

FLICK. No hurry! It's been getting cold ever since breakfast.

[With lagging steps they march to the table, and are about to eat, when BLICK starts back in surprise.

BLICK.

I say!

Some one's been drinking from my cup!

SNICK.

Some one has eat my porridge up!

FLICK.

And used my brand-new knife to spread
A monstrous corner of Quee's bread!

SCENE III

PLICK.

Some one has used my fork.

GLICK.

To break
A quarter off my barley-cake!

WHICK.

One cherry's missing from my four!

ALL.

And, goodness gracious, how much more?

[They gaze at each other in amazement.

BLICK. [Whispering.] Brothers, there must be Robbers in the house!

FLICK. Or Pirates.

GLICK. Or Burglars.

BLICK. Probably Burglars. If so, they are under the beds; burglars always are. Hush! Let every man look under his own bed.

[Each DWARF creeps to his bed, and peers cautiously under it. Then, one after the other, they rise, shaking their heads and saying, “Nobody under my bed!” “Nobody under my bed!” “Nobody under my bed!” BLICK is the last to rise, but as he does so he sees SNOW WHITE and cries, in a tense whisper] “But—there’s something in it! Look, brothers!”

S N O W W H I T E

[In wonder, the DWARFS creep about BLICK’s bed, and holding their lanterns high, gaze down upon the sleeping SNOW WHITE. An “ah!” of admiration breaks from their lips.

GLICK. [Whispering.] What is it?

FLICK. I know! It’s a child.

BLICK. No, it’s a girl. I saw one once.

FLICK. Well, girl or child, it’s the most beautiful thing I ever saw.

GLICK. Or I. Is it tame, or will it fly away like a bird, when it wakes up?

SCENE III

FLICK. I've heard that children are quite tame; —and they can talk!

ALL. [In rapture.] Oh!

BLICK. But I tell you this isn't a child, it's a girl. I don't think girls can talk. [They all heave a sigh of disappointment.]

FLICK. I wish she'd stay with us just so that we could look at her.

BLICK. She won't.

GLICK. Why not?

BLICK. Of course she won't. Are we handsome, or young, or tall? In fact, aren't we dwarfs? [They all hang their heads.]

FLICK. But if we didn't tell her that?

BLICK. Flick, I wonder at you! Besides, she might find it out.

GLICK. She's beautifully white and clean. Look, she's had the broom; she's been trying to sweep.

S N O W W H I T E

FLICK. I can't bear to think of her leaving us.

GLICK. None of us can.

FLICK. I'm going to stay up all night just to watch her.

GLICK. Do you think there's any way we could persuade her to stay?

BLICK. I'm afraid not.

FLICK. Even if we laid presents on her bed?

BLICK. What kind of presents? Gold and diamonds?

FLICK. Oh, not common things like that; really valuable things like—my jack-knife!

BLICK. Oh, things like that! It might! But I'm afraid not.

FLICK. We might try anyhow. Let each man give the most valuable thing he has in the world.

[BLICK collects the gifts. Each DWARF names his present lovingly as he takes it from his pocket.

SCENE III

BLICK. My thimble!

SNICK. My almanac.

PLICK. My empty bottle.

GLICK. And my pet frog.

BLICK. [Laying the gifts gently on the foot of Snow White's bed.] There! that may help. But no! It's no use, brothers. There is Quee!

ALL. [Hopelessly.] Yes! There is Quee!

FLICK. We might hide him?

BLICK. She'd be sure to find him sooner or later.

GLICK. He might reform.

BLICK. But we never could pretend he wasn't dirty. He hasn't been washed for fifty years.

FLICK. [With a sudden inspiration.] Brothers, why not wash him now?

GLICK. We might!

ALL. We WILL!!

S N O W W H I T E

BLICK. Flick, you're a genius. But it must be done at once or he won't be dry by morning. Get the utensils.

BLICK. [Marching to the pump.]

Here's the pump to douse him with!

SNICK. [Fetching the basin.]

Here are suds to souse him with!

FLICK. [Bringing the sponge.]

Here's the sponge to sop him with!

PLICK. [Hurrying with the broom.]

Here's the broom to mop him with!

GLICK. [Running with the soap.]

Here's the soap to scrub him with!

WHICK. [Waving the towel.]

Here's the cloth to rub him with!

[They surround QUEE, who stands abashed, his finger in his mouth.

BLICK. Quee, you are going to be . . .

S C E N E III

ALL. [In a tremendous whisper.] WASHED!

[They carry him to the barrel, plump him in with a great splash, and pump on him. Then, as they scrub and rub and soap and stir him about in the water, they chant in chorus:

THE DWARFS.

Here's the pump to douse him with!

Here are suds to souse him with!

Here's the sponge to sop him with!

Here's the broom to mop him with!

Here's the soap to scrub him with!

Here's the cloth to rub him with!

Rub! Scrub! Mop! Sop! Souse! Douse!

Rub!

Scrub!

Mop!

Sop!

Souse!

Douse!

[In their excitement they forget to be as quiet as they had meant to be, and SNOW

SNOW WHITE

WHITE stirs in her sleep. Then she wakes, and sits up.

SNOW WHITE. Where is this—? Oh, there are the children that live here. Why, they're not children. They have long beards! They're queer, little old men. They'll never let me stay with them. But I must tell them I'm here. [She rises, and standing by the bed says shyly.] I beg your pardon.

[The DWARFS turn suddenly.

SNOW WHITE. [With a little curtsey.] I'm sorry if I've disturbed you; but I was lost in the forest, and when I saw your house I was so tired and hungry that I came in and took a little food—without asking. Then I'm afraid I fell asleep. [She waits for an answer, but the DWARFS gaze at her in silence, so she falters on.] I'd pay for it, but I haven't any money. [Again a silence.] So all I can do is to say, "Thank you"—and "Good night." [She moves reluctantly to the door. The DWARFS sigh deeply. She turns for a farewell curtsey.] Thank you very much. [She half shuts

SCENE III

the door behind her, then re-opens it to repeat.]
Good night! [There is no answer, except another heavy sigh from the DWARFS. With sudden pity she bursts out.] Oh, you're not dumb, are you?

BLICK. [Clearing his throat.] No, we're not dumb; but you're a girl, aren't you?

SNOW WHITE. [Wonderingly.] Yes—I'm a girl.

BLICK. And young?

SNOW WHITE. I'm not very old.

BLICK. We don't know how to talk to young people.

SNOW WHITE. Well, most grown people begin, "Why, how you've grown!" And usually the next thing is, "How do you like your school?"

BLICK. [To SNOW WHITE.] "How you've grown."

FLICK. "How do you like your school?"

SNOW WHITE. [Smiling, but a little embarrassed.] Well—perhaps it is a little late for conversation. It's long past bedtime, isn't it?

SNOW WHITE

BLICK. Long past.

SNOW WHITE. There are six of you and—seven beds, aren't there?

BLICK. [Hastily putting the cover on the barrel.] Yes, there are seven beds.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, before I go perhaps I ought to tidy the one I slept in. I didn't tumble it much. [She goes to the bed.] What are these things on it? [She starts back.] Oh! one's a frog. It's alive!

GLICK. He was my frog. He's perfectly tame.

SNOW WHITE. What a funny thing to put on a bed.

BLICK. [Edging toward her eagerly.] They were meant to be presents.

SNOW WHITE. Presents? Is it Christmas here?

S C E N E III

BLICK. We don't know. We don't know what Christmas is.

SNOW WHITE. Oh—somebody's birthday?

FLICK. No, it's nobody's birthday.

SNOW WHITE. Then I don't see—?

BLICK. They were meant to be presents for you.

SNOW WHITE. For me?

FLICK. We were afraid you wouldn't like them.

BLICK. I knew you wouldn't like them.

SNOW WHITE. But I do like them. Do you mean that you're not angry with me,—that you don't dislike me so very much?

FLICK. Dislike you!

BLICK. We think you're the most wonderful thing we've ever seen!

SNOW WHITE. Oh, you darlings!—oh, I beg your pardon. Perhaps that wasn't respectful.

SNOW WHITE

BLICK. Nobody ever called us "darlings" before, so we don't know.

FLICK. But it sounds nice.

SNOW WHITE. And you wouldn't mind if I should stay to-night,—only just to-night?

BLICK. We wouldn't mind if you should stay forever—only just forever!

SNOW WHITE. Forever?

FLICK. Oh, will you?

SNOW WHITE. Oh, will you let me? Please let me live with you! I could be so useful.

BLICK. But our housekeeping . . .

SNOW WHITE. That's just how I could be useful. I can cook and sew and sweep and brew and make beds, and—oh, lot's of things.

BLICK. [Solemnly.] Will you excuse us a moment, please? [He calls the DWARFS together and whispers to them.] Did I hear right? Did she say she would stay?

S C E N E III

ALL. [Eagerly.] She did!

BLICK. [Confused.] Er—whatever shall we say?

ALL. [Perplexed.] We don't know.

BLICK. [Turning again to SNOW WHITE.] Er—could you tell us what it's usual to say when you're so glad that it almost bursts you?

SNOW WHITE. Would “Hip-hip-hurrah!” do?

BLICK. It sounds right. [Slowly.] Hip-hip-hurrah?

ALL. [Solemnly trying the new word.] Hip-hip-hurrah? [Then deciding that it does fit their feelings, they shout in a joyous outburst.] Hip-hip-hurrah!

SNOW WHITE. [Clapping her hands.] Oh, please, may I say, “Hip-hip-hurrah!” too? I am so glad and grateful.

ALL. Hip-hip-hurrah!!

SNOW WHITE. [Remembering.] But, oh—

S N O W W H I T E

you may not want me when I tell you who I am.
It may be dangerous . . .

BLICK. [Hopefully.] Do you steal?

SNOW WHITE. [Smiling.] No, not so bad as that. My name is Snow White.

BLICK. It sounds extremely clean.

SNOW WHITE. This morning I was a Princess.
[She sits on BLICK's bed to tell her story. She is growing drowsy again.]

FLICK. What's a Princess?

SNOW WHITE. Why, the daughter of a king and queen. My step-mother is Queen Brangomar.
[More sleepily.] She hates me so much that I'm afraid there must be something horrid about me . . . [she is very drowsy now] but I'm sure Prince Florimond didn't not like me . . . for . . . [She sinks back onto the bed and her eyes close. The DWARFS put their fingers to their lips. Then she revives a little and murmurs,] for a year and a day . . . oh, what was I saying? I'm so sleepy.

SHE SITS ON BLICK'S BED TO TELL HER STORY

S C E N E III

Please, mayn't I tell you to-morrow morning? All I can think of now is "good night!"

BLICK. [Softly.] Good night, Snow White!

SNOW WHITE. [Almost asleep.] Good night.

FLICK. Good night, Snow White.

SNOW WHITE. Good—night.

GLICK. Good night, Snow White.

SNOW WHITE. Good . . .

[There is a silence.

BLICK. [Whispering.] Brothers, she's asleep.
But she'll stay, she'll stay!

ALL. [Whispering.] Hip-hip-hurrah!

FLICK. I'm so happy I'm sad!

GLICK. [Wiping away a tear with his long beard.] I'm so happy it's making me cry!

SNICK. We're all so happy! [They all wipe their eyes with their beards.]

BLICK. We mustn't wake her. Not a sound now. We'll be quietest in bed. [Each DWARF creeps toward his bed.]

BLICK. [Puzzled.] But she's in my bed! Well, I'll take Flick's.

[He moves to the next bed, jumps in, and pulls the clothes over his head, (DWARFS always sleep with the bed-clothes over their heads). Of course each of the others has to move up one bed. As they pop in, one after another, and cover their heads they cry:

FLICK. I'll take Glick's!

GLICK. I'll take Snick's!

SNICK. I'll take Plick's!

PLICK. I'll take Whick's!

WHICK. I'll take Quee's!

BLICK. [Sitting up suddenly.] Brothers, we've forgotten Quee! [They all sit bolt upright. Then in a whisper they call.]

SCENE III

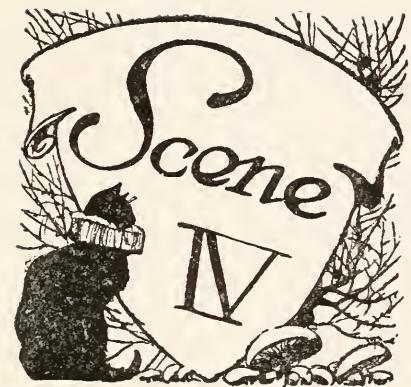

ALL. Q-U-E-E! [The cover over the water-barrel is pushed up, and QUEE's head appears. He is very wet, but washed as clean and pink as a new doll.]

BLICK. Quee, she'll stay, but you'll have to sleep in the barrel.

QUEE. Hip-hip-hurrah! [He disappears again into the barrel, and

THE CURTAIN FALLS

WHERE THE WITCH LIVES

WITCH HEX lives in a queer dark place, somewhat like a cavern, with walls of soft black moss. Yet it can't be underground, for looking out through the single entrance that serves for both door and window you can see the moon, very big and low, and always shining day or night.

A great fire blazes in the middle of the floor, and over it stands a boiling cauldron. Against the wall is a large chest, carved with strange signs, in which the WITCH keeps her Magic Things.

Curled up asleep by the fire lies her pet cat, FIDDLE.

FIDDLE is enormous for a cat—almost as big as a small boy. Presently he wakes, yawns and has a long stretch, shaking the last sleepiness out of both hind legs. Then he washes his face carefully, round and round, with his paw. He feels hungry, so he rubs his stomach; but as that doesn't do much good he looks about for something to eat. A large tin with holes bored in the cover stands on the chest, and he remembers seeing his mistress sprinkle something from this over her food. So he lies down on his back luxuriously, and, licking his chops, takes the tin in both hind paws and shakes it vigorously over his open mouth. But suddenly, with an enormous yowl, he leaps into the air, coughing, blinking, sneezing and mewing all at once. What he found was the WITCH's pepper-pot!

The pepper makes him feel extremely lively; and now he spies a loose end of yarn dangling from an old spinning-wheel that stands in a dark corner. He bounds to it and pats the swinging end to and fro. But the wool catches on one of his sharp claws and he cannot throw it off. He rolls on the ground to break it, but the yarn is strong and only binds him round and round. Now he is frightened, and begins to run and whirl and spring into the air; but with every movement the thread, unwinding from the wheel, wraps him closer and closer; and the more he spins and turns and somersaults head over heels, the more tangled he gets, till at last he cannot move a paw or even swing his indignant tail; and lies on his back a helpless, mewing bundle.

Fortunately at this moment there is a shadow across the moon, and WITCH HEX flies home, riding on her broomstick, a basket on her arm.

THE WITCH. [Alighting and setting her broom-stick away.] There! Glad to be home at last. Where is Queen Brangomar? I thought she'd be here before me with Snow White's heart. I had to go half way to the Moon for the other ingredients for that magic hair-restorer; but I've got them all, safe in my basket. Where is that lazy-bones Cat of mine? [She calls.] Fiddle, Fiddle, Fiddle!

[The only answer is a faint mew from something like a huge ball of yarn in the corner. The WITCH examines it, and then breaks into a laugh.

THE WITCH. Well, Fiddle, whatever have you been up to now? Oh, ho! playing with my spinning-wheel? Well, you are a snarl. Wait—I'll unwind you!

[She seizes one end of the yarn and winds it into a ball, but so quickly that poor FIDDLE, at the other end, spins and whirls and revolves like a top as she unwinds him, and the WITCH laughs at his antics till the tears stream down her withered old cheeks. When he is free, FIDDLE has to sit in a corner and hold his head in both paws for dizziness; but, picking up her basket, the WITCH says:

THE WITCH. Now come here and help me mix that magic hair restorer. We must stew all the other ingredients together before Brangomar comes.

[The WITCH and FIDDLE dance round and round the cauldron in a mystic circle;

"WE MUST STEW ALL THE OTHER INGREDIENTS TOGETHER BEFORE BRANGOMAR COMES"

S C E N E I V

*and as HEX throws the various things she has collected into the boiling brew
she sings:*

The musical score consists of five staves of music. The first staff features a soprano vocal line with lyrics: "plum — from Jack Hor-ner's Pie. —". The second staff contains a bassoon part with markings "mf cresc." and "2m * 2m 2m *". The third staff is a blank measure. The fourth staff begins with a treble clef and a key signature of one sharp, followed by a bassoon part with dynamics "ff" and "sf". The fifth staff starts with a treble clef and a key signature of one flat, followed by a bassoon part with dynamics "p" and "mf". The lyrics "slice — of green cheese — from the Man in the Moon; The" appear above the fifth staff.

WITCH sniffs the steam from the cauldron, and then sips a little of the brew from the ladle.

THE WITCH. Tastes good, and hot enough. Yes, the ladle is red hot. Now that's all except the heart. Fiddle, set the kettle to cool.

[FIDDLE takes the cauldron from over the fire and sets it in the corner.

THE WITCH. I'm chilly! [She tucks up her skirts and sits down comfortably on the blazing fire.] Ah, that feels good! Nothing to do now but wait for Snow White's heart. But then you shall see what you shall see—a beautiful head of long, wavy hair. Ah, here's Brangomar at last.

[QUEEN BRANGOMAR enters. FIDDLE bows low to her.

THE QUEEN. Sorry to be late, dear Hexy, but Berthold never returned till morning, and then I had to see personally to having him locked up in the Grey Tower. He made a frightful fuss; but I was afraid to trust him.

SCENE IV

THE WITCH. Did he bring the heart?

THE QUEEN. Yes, here it is. Oh, how I hated that child!

THE WITCH. Hair restorer's just ready for it. Help me up. Don't like to sit on the fire too long. I dosed off the other day and boiled over. Now the heart. [She takes it and hobbles to the cauldron.] Receipt says that when I add this the brew will turn a beautiful pink. Then I dip in my head, and presto! long and lovely hair. Now watch!

[She drops the heart into the cauldron, which steams vigorously.

THE WITCH. [Dancing with delight.] See it steam!

THE QUEEN. But it's turning green, not pink.

THE WITCH. So it is. Still, there can't be any mistake; I was most careful. Well, here goes for a handsome head of hair. You'll hardly know me when you see me again. [She dips her head three times into the steaming cauldron, and then raises it proudly.] How's that? Pretty fine, eh?

S N O W W H I T E

[Surely something has sprouted on the WITCH's bald pate. The QUEEN looks carefully, and then bursts into a peal of laughter; and FIDDLE, holding his sides, rolls on the ground in mirth.

THE WITCH. What are you laughing at? Feels very thick and curly. Stop that cackling!

THE QUEEN. [Hardly able to speak.] Oh, my dear Hex! Ha, ha, ha! You have—ha, ha, ha! —a headful of pig-tails!

THE WITCH. Pig-tails? Nonsense! It's short and curly.

THE QUEEN. Not pig-tails, Hexy. Your head is covered with little white, curly tails of pigs!

THE WITCH. Tails of pigs? Tails of pigs?
[She feels the growth carefully.] By Hop-scotch, they are pigs' tails! Stop laughing! If the joke's on anybody, it's on you. Instead of a human heart, your precious huntsman has brought back the heart of a pig; and Miss Snow White is alive at this moment. Ha, ha, for you!

SCENE IV

THE QUEEN. [Her laughter broken off short.] What? Snow White alive?

THE WITCH. If these are pigs' tails, that was a pig's heart. Ask your Magic Mirror if Snow White's not alive.

THE QUEEN. [Seizing the Mirror which hangs from her girdle.]

Mirror, mirror, in my hand,
Who's the fairest in the land?

THE MIRROR. [Answering.]

You, who hold me in your hand,
You were fairest in the land;
But to-day, I answer true,
Snow White is more fair than you.

THE QUEEN. Snow White alive! [She starts to dash the Mirror to the ground.]

S N O W W H I T E

THE WITCH. [Seizing it.] Be careful of that Mirror, I tell you!

Mirror, mirror, truly tell,
Where doth Princess Snow White dwell?

THE MIRROR. [Answering.]

'Mid the ancient forest dells
With the Seven Dwarfs she dwells.

THE WITCH. You see? Your deceitful huntsman has let Snow White escape, and brought back a pig's heart to fool us with. Snow White has found the house of the Seven Dwarfs—and there you are, my merry lady!

THE QUEEN. The Seven Dwarfs? Who are they?

THE WITCH. Rather nice little men; sort of gnomes. Live all alone. Never saw them myself.

THE QUEEN. [Wrapping her cloak about her.] Where do they live?

THE WITCH. Oh, ho! Intend to deal with Snow White yourself this time, do you?

S C E N E I V

THE QUEEN. Where do they live?

THE WITCH. The usual way is about twenty miles over the mountains, but there's a short cut through my back yard. Less than a mile away.

THE QUEEN. Give me a knife or a dagger, quickly!

THE WITCH. What? Walk into the Dwarfs' house, knife in hand and crown on your head like that? I'd sooner dance into a hornet's nest. Really, Brangomar, if I were you I'd swap brains with a grasshopper!

THE QUEEN. But what shall I do? She's alive! She's more beautiful than I! My heart will burn itself out of my body like a live coal. Tell me some way!

THE WITCH. Deary me! Have I got to plan it all out for you again? You're a nuisance.

THE QUEEN. How? How?

THE WITCH. There's only one safe way . . .

THE QUEEN. Yes?

THE WITCH. First, I must transform you into a different looking person altogether.

THE QUEEN. And then?

THE WITCH. And then give you some means of disposing of Snow White that the Dwarfs can't trace back to you. Fiddle, fetch me the deadly poison things.

THE QUEEN. Ah, poison! Yes, that's it!

THE WITCH. [Examining them.] Almost none left. Pair of poisoned slippers—no use. Poisoned pipe—no. Oh, here! Best thing in the box,—the poisoned apple. Beautiful, isn't it? Only the red side is poisoned, the white side is perfectly good. If you want to tempt anybody, eat the white side yourself; but the least bite of the red side, and down they drop, dead as a tombstone.

S C E N E I V

But no, you're not clever enough to be trusted with that. Ah, here we are,—the poisoned comb. The very thing!

THE QUEEN. Let me see it! [She seizes the jewelled comb.]

THE WITCH. Put that in Snow White's hair, let it stay there while you count one hundred, and all's over with her. It doesn't work instantly like the apple, but it's much safer with a stupid person like you.

THE QUEEN. How my fingers itch to set this in her black hair. Now what disguise?

THE WITCH. Disguise? Oh yes! Fiddle, bring me the Transformation Mixtures.

[FIDDLE brings from the chest three odd-shaped bottles, one filled with green, one with purple, and one with orange liquid.

THE WITCH. Are these all? My entire stock of magic is running out. Lucky I'm going to retire from business next year.

THE QUEEN. [Attempting to seize a bottle.]
Let me see . . .

THE WITCH. [Crossly.] Don't snatch!
Wretched manners! I'll read the labels.
[She reads one.] "Five drops before breakfast." Well I declare; I've written out the doses most carefully but totally forgotten what they change people into. But that's easily remedied.
A drop of each in the cauldron and you'll see for yourself. Now watch!

[She pours a few drops from the green bottle into the cauldron. Instantly a cloud of steam rises; and in the steam—dimly at first, and then quite clearly, appears the figure of an old and wrinkled hag in threadbare garments. On one arm she carries a large basket filled with ribbons, laces, needles, thread, and such articles.

THE WITCH. I remember, the Old Pedlar-woman disguise. Just the thing. You could pretend to be selling Snow White the comb. But let's see what the others are, anyhow.

S C E N E I V

[She pours some drops from the purple bottle into the cauldron. The image of the Pedlar-woman vanishes; in its place appears the figure of a small naked baby.

THE WITCH. Oh, the baby! I used that once myself; caught an awful cold too. Useless for you. Now how about this orange mixture?

[She pours from the orange bottle. This time the image is that of a stout, jovial, red-faced man. He wears an apron and has a green patch over one eye. Balanced on his head he carries a tray full of various sorts of pies.

THE WITCH. That's the one-eyed Pieman. Good, but not as good as the Pedlar-woman for your purpose.

THE QUEEN. What is a Pieman?

THE WITCH. Man who sells pies, stupid; what did you suppose? But a Pieman wouldn't be selling combs. Pedlar-woman it is. Green bottle.

[She reads.] "Dose, one tablespoonful, with a peppermint after." I haven't got a peppermint, but that was only to take away the taste. [She produces a spoon and uncorks the bottle.]

THE QUEEN. [Hesitating.] Is the taste very bad?

THE WITCH. Vile. Really, one of the nastiest tastes I ever made. Open your mouth.

THE QUEEN. [Shrinking back.] Er—is being transformed painful?

THE WITCH. No-o-o-o, but unpleasant. Feels as though you were being turned inside out like a glove. Open your mouth.

THE QUEEN. I think on the whole I'll wait till to-morrow. You see I have an important tea-party at Court this afternoon, and . . .

THE WITCH. Oh, ho! Cowardy, cowardy custard! Here, Fiddle, here's sport for you. Get the black mantle.

S C E N E I V

[From the chest, FIDDLE whisks a large black cloth embroidered with strange looking symbols, and advances toward the QUEEN.

THE QUEEN. What is he going to do?

THE WITCH. Wrap you up so that you can't scratch while I pour this down your throat.

THE QUEEN. But I'm not ready! I must go home first!

[She makes a dash for the door, but FIDDLE is before her. Then begins a lively chase about the cave, the QUEEN running and dodging, FIDDLE following and trying to throw the black mantle over her head. The WITCH enjoys it all hugely, crying, "Run, Brangomar!" "Catch her, Fiddle!" and slapping her old knees with delight till she is quite out of breath. At last FIDDLE succeeds in cornering QUEEN BRANGOMAR, and throws the mantle over her head.

SNOW WHITE

THE WITCH. [Breathless.] Well done, Fiddle, well done! Trip her up and sit on her.

[FIDDLE does so. The WITCH also sits down on the squirming QUEEN, and humming happily to herself pours out a tablespoonful of the green mixture.

THE WITCH. Now, where is her mouth?

THE QUEEN. [In a smothered voice.] I won't take it! I won't!

THE WITCH. Oh, there it is! Thank you, Brangomar. [She pours the dose through the cloth into the QUEEN's mouth, and as the QUEEN writhes she goes on.] I know it tastes bad, but nothing to make such a fuss about. [Suddenly she holds up a warning finger.] I feel her changing! Do you? [FIDDLE nods.] Done! Up with her, off with the mantle, and let's see the result.

[FIDDLE draws off the mantle. Lo! the QUEEN has been transformed into the likeness of the old Pedlar-woman just as it appeared in the steam, basket of goods and all.

THE WITCH. Splendid! Wouldn't recognise you myself, Brangomar. Hope you haven't lost the poisoned comb. No, here it is in your hand. Now, it wasn't half as bad as you thought it would be, was it?

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. [Crossly.] It was awful! Why—is this my voice?

THE WITCH. Of course. Different voice with every disguise.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. I'm all cramps, too. How do I change back?

THE WITCH. Dear me; lucky you thought to ask. I might have forgotten. Just say:—

“Peas porridge hot,

“Peas porridge cold,

“Peas porridge in the pot,

“Nine days old;”

but say it backwards like this:

Old days nine,
Pot in the porridge peas,
Cold porridge peas,
Hot porridge peas.

That turns you right side out again.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. I must remember. Let me see:—“Old days nine . . .” [But the Witch claps her hand over Brangomar’s mouth.]

THE WITCH. Gracious, woman, don’t say it yet! We’d have all this to do over again. Really, you are the most senseless— Oh, be off with you. I’ve had quite enough of you for one day.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Now for Snow White! Oh, Hex, once I set this in her hair and see her lying dead—dead before my own eyes . . .

THE WITCH. [Interrupting.] Don’t forget to count one hundred!

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. It will be the happiest moment of my life!

THE WITCH. Nasty disposition!

AND OFF SHI STRIDES TOWARD THE HOUSE OF THE SEVEN DWARFS

S C E N E I V

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. [Going to the door.] You shan't escape me this time, my little beauty! You have no soft-hearted Berthold to deal with now, but Brangomar, Brangomar her very self! [And off she strides toward the house of the SEVEN DWARFS.]

[Left alone with FIDDLE, the WITCH goes to the blazing fire and again sits down upon it, thoughtfully.

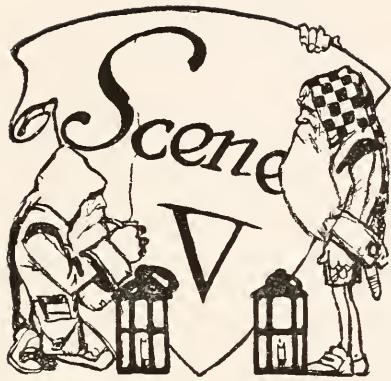

THE WITCH. Poor little Snow White! I'm afraid her goose is cooked this time. I'm really sorry for her. I don't bear her any ill will in spite of my pigs' tails. Fiddle, bring my mirror.

[FIDDLE brings the mirror, and WITCH HEX studies her new appearance carefully.

THE WITCH.: Oh, not so bad after all! They're quite becoming; sure to keep their curl in the damp-est weather, and certainly the very latest thing!

THE CURTAIN FALLS

IN THE HOUSE OF THE SEVEN DWARFS

The room is the same as before, but quite transformed by SNOW WHITE's house-keeping. It shines with cleanness. There are white coverlets on all the beds, curtains at the window, and flowers on the window-sill. SNOW WHITE's silver dress has been carefully put away, and she wears a little frock made of squirrel skins and trimmed with bright leaves.

It is early in the morning, and the DWARFS are just starting off for the day's work. Each carries a neat little basket of luncheon which SNOW WHITE has put up, and each wears a bright bow tie which she has made for him. They are so proud of these ties that they have parted their beards over their shoulders to show them.

SNOW WHITE

SNOW WHITE has just finished tying QUEE's bow.
She pats it into shape, kisses him, and says:

SNOW WHITE. There! Off you go!

BLICK. Couldn't you please give us all another kiss?

SNOW WHITE. [Merrily.] No indeed!

FLICK. Just one?

SNOW WHITE. Not one!

GLICK. A little one?

SNOW WHITE. No! That's the rule: one a day, morning or night, but not both.

BLICK. You see none of us ever, er—should I say “ate” or “tasted”—a kiss till you came, so perhaps we are a little eager about them.

SNOW WHITE. I should say you were! Why, you're perfect children about kisses and games.

SCENE V

BLICK. [Sadly.] That comes of our being dwarfs. You see, no dwarf is ever born till he's fifty. So, as we've never been young, we enjoy games all the more now.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, I understand, you little old dears; but still I mustn't spoil you. And that reminds me, you're not to come home any more in the middle of the morning to play games. Tuesday you came back at eleven, Wednesday at ten, and yesterday morning at nine! What sort of a way to work is that?

BLICK. [Penitently.] I know, but . . .

SNOW WHITE. Now not a moment before five to-day, because—[She beckons them together and whispers.] this is a secret—I'm going to make an enormous cake with sugar frosting for supper! Now, off with you.

BLICK. Well, brothers, ready. To-day we go into the forest for firewood. March!

[In their usual military file the DWARFS

march off into the forest. SNOW WHITE stands in the doorway, waving her hand after them till they are out of sight. Then with a little sigh of content she returns to the room.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, I'm so happy here. I've never been so happy in all my life. Of course I miss my dear Maids of Honour and the others; but the Dwarfs are so funny and loving and kind. [She looks out of the window.] It's a beautiful day. [With a little pensive sigh.] I wonder if I shall ever see Prince Florimond again. [But she checks herself sharply.] Stop that, Snow White!

You wonder about him much too often. Remember, you're not a Princess any more, only just house-keeper to the Seven Dwarfs. You must forget all about the other things. To work! Now for that cake.

[She fetches the mixing bowl. As she does so the little BROWN BIRD that guided her through the forest, flies to the window, perches on the sill, and gives his call.

SNOW WHITE. Ah, my little brown bird, back again for your morning crumbs? Here they are. [She scatters the crumbs, but instead of eating them, the little BIRD breaks into full song.] Not hungry? Just come to sing for me? You dear! [The song is so merry that she dances a step or two.] Whenever you sing, brown bird, I feel like dancing. But I do need somebody to dance with. The Dwarfs never can learn.

[Just then she spies a big WHITE BUTTERFLY that is fluttering gaily by the window.]

SNOW WHITE. Oh, there's a big white butterfly. I wonder if it would come and dance with me. [She runs to the open door and calls.] White butterfly, white butterfly, will you come and dance with Snow White? Oh, it's coming, it's coming! Sing, little brown bird! The butterfly is coming to dance with me!

[And indeed the BUTTERFLY does follow her into the room, and flits about here and there—now just within her grasp, now high over her head; and SNOW WHITE, now pursuing it, now letting it follow her, does contrive a little romping dance with her new friend. And all the time the little BROWN BIRD sings lustily on the window sill.

SNOW WHITE

SNOW WHITE

The musical score consists of five staves of music, likely for a wind ensemble or orchestra. The score includes dynamic markings such as p, f, sf, mf, cresc., and rit.. Articulations include slurs, grace notes, and accents. Performance instructions like "poco rit.", "a tempo", and "ff molto rall." are interspersed throughout. The score is divided into measures by vertical bar lines and includes rehearsal marks (e.g., 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6) and measure numbers (e.g., 8^{ta}, 8^{ta}, 8^{ta}, 8^{ta}, 8^{ta}, 8^{ta}) above the staves. The music is set against a background of "ta" and "ta *" markings.

SCENE V

The sheet music consists of five staves of musical notation for piano, arranged vertically. The music is in common time and uses a key signature of one flat. The notation includes various dynamics such as cresc., mf, dim., rit., p, and a tempo. Performance instructions like senza Ped. and踏 (pedal) markings are also present. The music is divided into measures by vertical bar lines, and specific notes or groups of notes are often numbered (e.g., 1, 2, 3, 4, 5) above them. Measure numbers are also indicated at the beginning of some staves.

SCENE V

[Suddenly the BROWN BIRD stops singing and flies away, and the WHITE BUTTERFLY darts to the door and flutters up among the tree-tops.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, don't stop, little Bird. We want to go on. Where are you going, White Butterfly? They've both flown away! They seemed frightened.

[She turns to see what has frightened them. The QUEEN, disguised as the PEDLAR-WOMAN, is leaning in at the window. SNOW WHITE's hand springs to her heart.

SNOW WHITE. Oh . . . !

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Did I frighten you, dearie? No harm in an old Pedlar-Woman.

SNOW WHITE. You did startle me.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. So that's the way you pass your time in the forest, is it—singing and dancing? What a thing it is to be rich.

SNOW WHITE

SNOW WHITE. But I'm not rich. I suppose I'm very poor now.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. I've come a weary way. I'm that worn and footsore . . . !

SNOW WHITE. Oh, do come in. I'm so sorry.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. [Entering.] Thank you, dearie. I'll just bar the door behind me for fear of the rheumatic drafts. I've been wandering days and days in this forest, and never met a soul to buy the least trinket of me.

SNOW WHITE. I'm afraid I don't think a deserted forest is a very good place to sell things.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. But you'll buy some little thing, my pet, some pretty little thing?

SNOW WHITE. I'm awfully sorry, but . . .

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Don't any of my pretty things tempt you? And cheap!—really costs more to sell 'em than they're worth. Look, sweetheart!

S C E N E V

Here's ribbons and laces,
And gentlemen's braces,
A feather as white as foam;
A chain and a locket,
A purse for your pocket,
And oh, what a beautiful comb,
That comb!
Just see, what a beautiful comb!

Here's bangles and spangles,
A bracelet with dangles,
A necklace with beads from Rome;
An outfit for cross-stitch,
The egg of an ostrich,
But oh, what a beautiful comb,
That comb!
A really magnificent comb!

Here's powder and patches,
And Lucifer matches,
A motto with "Home, sweet Home,"
And trimmings for frockings,

S N O W W H I T E

And stockings with clockings;
But nothing so fine as this comb,
 This comb!
Just look, what a beautiful comb!

SNOW WHITE. They're very attractive, but I've no money.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Now that's too bad, dearie. I don't hardly feel as if I could go without leaving some little thing behind me. Rather make you a present, so I would.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, I couldn't take a present from you. I ought to be giving you something instead.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. You gave me kind words and bid me in friendly. I'll tell you what, if you've no money I'll make you a free gift, sweetheart.

SNOW WHITE. I couldn't really!

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. I'm set on it, my lamb, set on it! Name your choice and yours it shall be.

S C E N E V

SNOW WHITE. Well, since you're so very kind, I'll take [she names the least valuable article] that spool of thread.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. [With pretended umbrage.] Spool o' thread, indeed! Would you mock a poor body? Now what do you say to this comb?

SNOW WHITE. That? Why that's the finest thing you have.

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Just why I give it to you, my dear; and lovely it will look, a-shining in your black hair.

SNOW WHITE. [Shrinking away.] No, no! I couldn't take anything so valuable!

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Come, dearie, just let me put it in for you, and then if you don't like the look of it—well, I'll say no more and be on my way.

SNOW WHITE. I should like to see how it looks —just for fun.

SNOW WHITE

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. That's my pet; that's my sweetheart! Now sit you down, [SNOW WHITE sits on a stool] and shut your eyes so you shan't peep till it's in . . . are they shut?

SNOW WHITE. [Laughing.] Yes, tight shut!

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Then, here goes!

[She puts the poisoned comb in SNOW WHITE'S hair. For a moment SNOW WHITE does not move. Then with a little moan, she rises, swaying.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, my head—my head! [She tries to put her hand to her head; but suddenly she totters, falls in a heap on the floor and lies quite still.]

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. [Watches her for a moment, then cries exultingly.] Ah, ha! So, my dear step-daughter, Queen Brangomar laughs last, after all! Now, to count one hundred while the poison works. [And she begins to count.] “One, two, three, four, five . . .” [Suddenly she stops to listen.] What's that?

SCENE V

[Steps are heard outside the little house. They come nearer. There is a knock at the door, and BLICK's voice is heard.

BLICK. Snow White, it's us, the Dwarfs. Open the door. [He knocks again.]

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. [In terror.] The Dwarfs! They'll tear me to pieces if they find me here. I must hide her! Where, where? [She looks about for a place to hide SNOW WHITE and seeing no other hope, drags the big table over her and pulls the table cloth down to hide her. Meantime the DWARFS knock more and more impatiently.]

BLICK. Please open, Snow White. We haven't come back for games, honestly. We want to go down into the mines again.

[The PEDLAR-WOMAN crouches along the wall, looking for some means of escape.

FLICK. [Outside, calling.] Snow White!

GLICK. [Calling.] Snow White!

SNOW WHITE

ALL THE DWARFS. [Calling together.] Snow White!

BLICK. [Outside.] Brothers, there's something wrong! The window!

[The DWARFS run to the window and look in. They spy the crouching PEDLAR-WOMAN.]

PEDLAR-WOMAN. [Realising that she is caught and ducking and curtseying.] Oh, it's you, my little gentlemen!

BLICK. Open the door!

PEDLAR-WOMAN. Yes, indeed, your honours! At once, your honours! [But as she goes to unbar the door she continues to count, under her breath.] Twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four . . .

BLICK. [Beating on the door.] Quickly, I tell you!

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Yes, your honours!

[She throws the door open. The DWARFS

SCENE V

rush in fiercely, their little knives drawn, and surround the PEDLAR-WOMAN.

BLICK. What are you doing here?

FLICK. Where is Snow White?

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Safe and sound, my little gentlemen. But I've scarce breath to tell you. Just give me thirty seconds—or thirty-one or thirty-two or thirty-three . . .

BLICK. What are you mumbling?

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. I was passing by with my basket o' wares . . . [BLICK makes a threatening gesture and she hurries on with a little cry.] . . . just passing—when your sweet little lady calls me to step in.

BLICK. Where is she now?

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. She stepped into the forest on an errand, and bid me mind the house till she got back.

BLICK. Errand? What errand?

SNOW WHITE

FLICK. How long has she been gone?

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. A matter of seconds, your honour. Fifty seconds, maybe, or fifty-one or fifty-two or fifty-three or fifty-four . . .

BLICK. [Interrupting.] Well, you need stay no longer. Go!

THE PEDLAR-WOMAN. Yes, your honours. Certainly, your honours. [She goes courtesying to the door, but turns to say,] Could you tell a poor peddling body how far it might be to the next town? Is it fifty-five miles now, or fifty-six or fifty-seven or . . .

BLICK. [Fiercely.] Be off, or we'll lay hands on you!

[With a little scream the PEDLAR-WOMAN makes off; but as she passes the window she is heard still counting "fifty-eight, fifty-nine, sixty, sixty-one . . ." till her voice dies away in the distance.

BLICK. Brothers, something's wrong! What errand could Snow White have in the forest?

SCENE V

FLICK. And why didn't we meet her?

BLICK. She'd never leave the house in her charge.

GLICK. Unless she was frightened.

SNICK. And ran away.

FLICK. That's it!

BLICK. She may be hiding in the forest now. Quick, brothers; go east, west, north and I'll go south.

[All the DWARFS rush out except BLICK, who hesitates.

BLICK. Yet it's not like Snow White to be frightened. I wonder . . . [Suddenly he spies something on the floor near the table. It is one of SNOW WHITE's slippers that came off when she fell, and which the PEDLAR-WOMAN had overlooked.] What's that? Her slipper! [He calls loudly.] Brothers, Brothers! She is here! Here is her slipper! Search the house!

[The DWARFS rush back into the room, and

begin to seek under the beds and behind the pump; but FLICK pulls up the table-cloth and cries:

FLICK. Look! Here she is!

[They move the table away and kneel about her in consternation.

BLICK. She has fainted. Water!

GLICK. Is she hurt?

FLICK. Unlace her bodice.

BLICK. It's loose. She's breathing, faintly.

FLICK. What's that in her hair?

BLICK. A comb. She never wore it before. Out with it! [He draws the comb from SNOW WHITE's hair; but suddenly hurls it away, crying.] Oh! it burned my fingers!

SNICK. Poisoned?

GLICK. Look!

[SNOW WHITE's eyelids flutter and she sighs.

THEY KNEEL ABOUT HER IN CONSTERNATION

SCENE V

BLICK. See! her eyes! She's coming to!

[SNOW WHITE stirs; then opens her eyes and lifts her head.]

SNOW WHITE. Oh . . . what . . . what happened?

THE DWARFS. [Tenderly.] Snow White!

SNOW WHITE. I was talking with the old Pedlar-woman . . .

BLICK. Ah! the old woman!

SNOW WHITE. And . . . where is she? Why, there's the comb!

BLICK. The comb?

SNOW WHITE. She wanted to give it to me. I let her put it in my hair just to see how it looked and then I must have fainted.

BLICK. Brothers, that comb was poisoned.

FLICK. She tried to poison our Snow White.

SNOW WHITE. To poison me? Perhaps it may have been the comb. But she didn't. You saved me, didn't you, my dear brothers. I'm all alive again! And quite well! See?

SNOW WHITE

[She rises.]

BLICK. [Ominously.] Brothers! [He draws his knife, and the others follow his example.] Snick, you stay to guard Snow White. The rest follow me.

[They hasten toward the door.]

SNOW WHITE. [Stopping them.] Where are you going?

BLICK. [Terribly.] To catch that Pedlar-woman.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, please don't! Why should she want to poison me? The only one who might want to harm me is Queen Brangomar.

BLICK. Snow White, I believe that was Queen Brangomar.

S C E N E V

SNOW WHITE. Oh, no! Brangomar is very beautiful.

BLICK. But she knows magic; she may have disguised herself. Come, brothers!

SNOW WHITE. [Barring the way.] Oh, please, please don't go. She might harm you!

BLICK. [Scornfully.] Harm us! Let me go, Snow White.

SNOW WHITE. [Clinging to him.] No, no! Listen! If that was Brangomar she'll think I'm all dead now and won't try again; but if she finds out that I am still alive, she might. Don't you see?

BLICK. [Hesitating.] I see,—but . . .

SNOW WHITE. Oh, I ask you, please!

BLICK. It's not fair to ask us "please."

SNOW WHITE. But I do. I ask you please, please, please!

BLICK. [As he sheathes his knife.] Well—this time. But, brothers, we must guard our Princess more carefully in future.

S N O W W H I T E

THE DWARFS. Yes, indeed!

BLICK. Snow White, promise that when we're away you will keep the door barred, and never let any one in.

GLICK. No matter who they are.

FLICK. No matter what they look like.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, I'm not afraid!

BLICK. But you must promise, solemnly.

SNOW WHITE. Oh, very well, I promise—

“Truly, rooly,
“Black and bluely,
“Cross my heart!”

Now, let's forget all about such disagreeable things. To celebrate—[She claps her hands.] I'll tell you, let's declare this morning a holiday!

THE DWARFS. [Dancing with delight.] A holiday?

SCENE V

SNOW WHITE. And we'll all play a game before you go back to the mines.

THE DWARFS. Hip, hip, hurrah!

SNOW WHITE. Shall we play "Blind Man's Buff" or "Puss-in-the-Corner" or "Snap the Whip"?

THE DWARFS. [Chanting in chorus.] "Blind Man's Buff," "Puss-in-the-Corner" AND "Snap the Whip"!

SNOW WHITE. All three? Well, "Blind Man's Buff" first.

BLICK. Clear away!

They clear the floor for Games, and begin with "Blind Man's Buff." The DWARFS always want SNOW WHITE to choose who shall be blind-folded—they never can agree among themselves—and she chooses GLICK. Now, GLICK is a very spry old fellow, and he nearly catches WHICK on the very first dash; so nearly that WHICK only escapes by crawling under a bed. Next, he corners QUEE; but QUEE is so small that he creeps out between GLICK's legs. It is a long while before GLICK can touch anybody else; and indeed he only catches SNICK at last because SNICK trips over his own long beard, and falls flat. Even then it takes GLICK some time to tell whom he has caught, for the DWARFS are all very much alike. But at last GLICK feels a bump on SNICK's bald head that came at least a hundred and twenty-five years ago when an enormous diamond fell on him in the mines, and has never gone away again.

Next they play, "Puss-in-the-Corner," and get so excited about it that they clamber all over the clean, starched coverlets that SNOW WHITE had only just finished ironing; so she is relieved when the game is over.

Finally comes "Snap-the-Whip." They

SCENE V

“snap” it so hard that when the line breaks they all fall down, puffing and holding their old sides; and little QUEE, the “snapper,” has to turn four complete somersaults before he can stop.

No sooner have they got breath again than they all surround SNOW WHITE, dancing up and down, and crying: “More, more, more!” But she shakes her head firmly.

SNOW WHITE. Dear me, no! Remember, I have that cake to bake before supper. You really must go. And don’t come back till five.

FLICK. Oh, please make it four.

SNICK. Or half past, anyhow.

SNOW WHITE. No, five. Not a moment sooner.

BLICK. [Resignedly.] Well, brothers, march.

[And down they all file into the underground passage leaving SNOW WHITE alone.]

S N O W W H I T E

SNOW WHITE. Hasn't this been a morning! I only got as far with that cake as the bowl. Now, first the flour. [She puts some flour in the bowl, and then suddenly remembers.] Gracious! I almost forgot my promise to bar the door!

[She bars the door; but as she does so she hears, in the forest, a distant sort of chanting song. It comes nearer.

SNOW WHITE. What's that? Somebody singing? I was only just in time. Why, they're coming here!

[You can hear the words of the chanting clearly now. They are:

Anybody want to buy,
Any sort of baker's pie?
Pies! Pies! Pies! Pies!

SNOW WHITE. Oh, a baker-man selling pies. Really, people do have the most curious ideas about this forest.

[The person coming is, as a matter of fact, QUEEN BRANGOMAR in another disguise.

SCENE V

She suspected that the DWARFS might take the comb from SNOW WHITE's hair before the poison had time to do its work; so she hastened back to the WITCH—who wasn't a bit glad to see her—and with a dose from the orange bottle transformed herself again, this time into the likeness of the One-eyed Pieman. Then she—or I suppose I should say he—hastened back to the forest, and now, after spying about to make sure that the DWARFS are not near, has approached the house with the tray of pies on his head.

THE PIEMAN. [Close behind the door now.]

Anybody want to buy,
Any sort of baker's pie?
Pies! Pies! Pies! Pies!

[He knocks at the door, “rat-a-tat-tat; tat-tat.” SNOW WHITE does not answer. The PIEMAN goes to the window and looks in.

S N O W W H I T E

THE PIEMAN. Hello! Didn't you hear me knock?

SNOW WHITE. I'm sorry, but I can't let you in.

THE PIEMAN. Oh, cooking, I see. Just ready to mix, eh? That's my line of business; baker-pies, all kinds. [He chants rapidly.]

Pumpkin, custard, veal-and-ham,
Chocolate, lemon, squash and lamb,
Gooseberry, blueberry, peach and quince,
Chicken, cocoanut, apple, mince.

SNOW WHITE. I really don't want any, thank you.

THE PIEMAN. Of course not. No good cook would ever eat a baker's pie; and you are a good cook.

SNOW WHITE. [A little flattered.] Well, I've had some experience.

THE PIEMAN. I can tell that by the hitch of your apron. Now my specialty is apple pies, and . . .

SCENE V

SNOW WHITE. [Interrupting.] Oh, please don't offer to give me one. I couldn't take it.

THE PIEMAN. Who was offering? I just wanted to ask your opinion.

SNOW WHITE. [Contritely.] I beg your pardon. Of course I'll give you my opinion.

THE PIEMAN. You know that old apple tree half a mile back? Do those apples make good pies?

SNOW WHITE. I don't know.

THE PIEMAN. They look splendid. Here's one I picked. It's as red and white as your face. If it is a good pie apple, I'll go back and get a sackful.

SNOW WHITE. You can't tell from the looks, you know. Some are too sweet and some are too sour.

THE PIEMAN. Well, taste, and we'll compare opinions. You eat the red half and I'll eat the white. [He splits the apple in two, and tosses the red half through the window into SNOW WHITE'S apron.] Catch! [He eats his half.] Just right to me, sweet and sour.

SNOW WHITE

SNOW WHITE. [Starts to taste her half; but then, with a faint suspicion, she sets it down and says:] Thank you, but I don't eat between meals.

THE PIEMAN. [Munching luxuriously.] What, temper touchy? Well, I don't blame you. Often feel like that myself on baking days. But this tastes to me like a prime pie apple. I advise you to get some. Luck to your baking! Good-day. [Repeating his cry.]

Anybody want to buy,
Any sort of baker's pie,
Pies! Pies! Pies! Pies!

[He makes off into the forest.

SNOW WHITE. [Alone and penitently.] I was horrid to him. He only wanted my advice. He didn't try to come in. It is a splendid apple. [She looks at it longingly.] If it's good I could make the Dwarfs an apple-dumpling apiece. He ate his half.

SCENE V

[She bites the red cheek of the apple. Suddenly she grasps her throat, whirls about once, falls, and lies quite still. After a moment, the face of the PIEMAN appears at the window, peering in cautiously.]

THE PIEMAN. Ah, she did taste it! I thought she would if I went away. But there must be no mistake this time. No more mistakes! [He leans through the window, and with his staff pries up the bar that fastens the door.] First, off with this disguise. [He repeats:]

Old days nine,
Pot in the porridge peas,
Cold porridge peas,
Hot porridge peas.

[And instantly the PIEMAN's outward appearance changes, and it is QUEEN BRANGOMAR in her royal robes that sweeps into the room and hastens to SNOW WHITE's body.

SNOW WHITE

THE QUEEN. [Kneeling beside SNOW WHITE.] No breath! No heart! Quite dead at last! This time, my lady, white as snow, red as blood and black as ebony the Dwarfs cannot wake you. But I must hide that. [She picks up the apple.] They mustn't trace me. [Then rising she strides to the door and cries:] Now, you wretched little dwarfs, you miserable little gnomes, you moles, you earth-worms, bring her to life this time if you can. I defy you! Queen Brangomar defies you! [She rushes off into the wood crying as she goes:] Dead at last! At last! At last!

[Hardly has the QUEEN'S voice died away, when the stone over the underground passage is lifted, and BLICK appears.

BLICK. [Anxiously.] Did you call, Snow White? I was standing guard, and I thought I heard . . .

[He sees SNOW WHITE's prostrate body. He goes

"AH, SHE DID TASTE IT! I THOUGHT SHE WOULD IF I WENT AWAY"

SCENE V

to her and touches her hand. It is cold. With a voice of agony, he cries down the passage:] Brothers! Brothers!

THE CURTAIN FALLS

[After a moment it rises again. It is moonlight now; and the DWARFS, with lighted lanterns are grouped about the bed on which they have laid SNOW WHITE. All day long they have tried to restore her. They have bathed her face with water and wine, and fanned her, and chafed her little hands and feet, but without avail. After a long silence BLICK speaks.]

BLICK. There is no hope, my brothers. There is nothing more to do. Our Snow White is dead.

[One by one they kneel about her, silently; but little QUEE, unable to restrain his tears, falls sobbing at her feet.]

AGAIN THE CURTAIN FALLS

[195]

A GLADE IN THE DEEP WOOD

The DWARFS have laid SNOW WHITE in a coffin made all of clear crystal and wrought silver, and set it in this secret glade. The glade is near to their house, but so encircled by great trees as to be hidden from every side. Here for nearly a year they have watched over her, day and night, two watching at a time. Every morning they weave a fresh pall of ferns and wild flowers to lay over the coffin when the sun has risen high; and so covered it looks like a ferny mound blossoming.

To-night SNICK and FLICK are on watch. They sit silent for a time.

SNICK. The moon has been up an hour.

S N O W W H I T E

FLICK. It is time Blick came to take my place.

SNICK. I wish it were always my turn to watch.
I have no heart for anything else.

FLICK. Nor I, brother, nor I!

SNICK. Here comes Blick now.

FLICK. Why is he running?

[BLICK enters breathless.

BLICK. Danger! Put out your lanterns! A man has been prowling about the forest since sundown. He is ragged and wild and carries a knife. We have surrounded him; we will pounce out and bind him; but he looks strong. We shall need you, Snick. Flick must guard alone. Come this way, but keep behind the trees. The others are closing in.

[They creep off. FLICK, left alone, covers the coffin with the pall, and then goes to the edge of the glade.

S C E N E V I

FLICK. Ah, I see him. He has come out into the open. They are stealing up behind him. He sees them! his knife is out! Quick, quick, brothers! They have him now. Down he goes like a falling tree. Bind him fast, brothers! [He shouts.] This way! This way!

[Presently the other DWARFS drag the strange man to the spot. They have bound him with many ropes. His clothes are ragged and he looks unkempt and wild. It is BERTHOLD the Huntsman.]

BLICK. Let him get up, but take away his knife.

[They wrest BERTHOLD's knife from him. He staggers to his feet.]

BERTHOLD. What is all this? The first I know I am on my back and bound. Who are you that are so little and so strong?

BLICK. We are the Seven Dwarfs of this Forest. What are you doing in our domain?

BERTHOLD. Dwarfs? I mean you no harm.

S N O W W H I T E

BLICK. What are you doing here?

BERTHOLD. I am seeking some one who was lost here—lost long ago; but I must search every inch of this wood. Let me go.

BLICK. Tell us who you are.

BERTHOLD. No!

BLICK. We shall keep you prisoner till you do.

BERTHOLD. I cannot tell you.

BLICK. Bind him to a tree till he is ready to speak.

BERTHOLD. No, no, let me go! I must search all night. I must not lose a moment. If I tell you why I am searching will you let me go?

BLICK. We make no promises.

BERTHOLD. You have good faces; I will trust you. A year ago in this forest I—left—a young girl. I cannot tell you why, but oh, I thought it wise at the time. I was to come back next day and care for her; but when I reached the city I was seized and imprisoned.

FLICK. [Crying out.] Can he be . . . ?

BLICK. Hush! [To BERTHOLD.] Go on!

BERTHOLD. It has taken me a whole year to escape. I dug a tunnel under the prison tower with that broken knife. I first saw daylight yesterday. I stopped only to hide my children; then I fled here to the forest to search. I have little hope—how could she live a year?—but I must search! Now, will you let me go?

[There is a moment's silence. BLICK consults the others with a look, and replies.

BLICK. If you can answer three questions we will let you go.

BERTHOLD. [Wonderingly.] Questions?

BLICK. Who was the woman who imprisoned you?

BERTHOLD. Woman? How did you know that? It was a woman, and the wickedest on this earth—Queen Brangomar!

S N O W W H I T E

BLICK. Your name is—Berthold?

BERTHOLD. [Amazed.] You know me?

BLICK. [Softly.] Who was the—child?

BERTHOLD. Her name was Snow White.

BLICK. [Gently.] Loose him, brothers.

[Quickly the DWARFS strip the ropes from BERTHOLD'S arms; but he cries out.

BERTHOLD. No, no, do not stop for that! Do you know anything of her? Tell me in pity's name. Is she alive?

BLICK. Alas, poor Berthold, one look will tell you more than many words. Brothers, uncover her.

[Reverently two of the DWARFS strip back the pall from the coffin and reveal
SNOW WHITE. Her little silver dress gleams in the moonlight. She looks as fair as if she had just fallen asleep.

SCENE VI

[With a cry BERTHOLD sinks on his knees beside her.

BERTHOLD. Snow White! Oh my Princess! Dead! I knew it must be so; but I hoped against hope!

WHICK. [Gently.] She wandered to us in the Forest. She lived with us. We cared for her.

BLICK. Once before she was in peril, and we saved her; but this time we came too late.

BERTHOLD. When did it happen,—yesterday?

BLICK. No, many months ago. But her red lips have never paled, nor her white skin looked less fair than snow. We could not bear to hide her away in the black earth, so we made this coffin of crystal and silver, and wrote her name upon it, "The Princess Snow White." And here we watch over her night and day. We loved her so!

SNOW WHITE

BERTHOLD. You could not love her more than I. [His head sinks on his arms and he sobs.]

[With a quick gesture BLICK gathers the DWARFS about him, and whispers to them.

BLICK. Brothers, he loved her, and he is a man! Let us ask what he would do.

THE DWARFS. [In eager whispers.] Yes! Yes!

[BLICK gently replaces the pall.

BERTHOLD. No, no, do not cover her! Let me look at her always.

BLICK. Berthold, is it enough to watch? Month after month, we have watched, but we are Dwarfs. We thought a Man would not be satisfied to weep.

BERTHOLD. [Rising.] You do well to rouse me. She shall be avenged!

[The DWARFS look at one another their

SCENE VI

eyes burning with excitement; but BLICK goes on quietly.

BLICK. Ah, that is what we have longed to do
—how we have longed!

BERTHOLD. But you have done nothing?

BLICK. What could we do? [He bows his head.] We are Dwarfs. We know nothing of the world of men and cities. We hoped that her enemy might some day creep back here. But we are not even sure who . . .

BERTHOLD. Sure? It was Brangomar, the only enemy our little Princess ever had.

BLICK. And Brangomar is—a Queen!

SNICK. Upon a Throne!

GLICK. With a great Court about her!

FLICK. In a great City!

WHICK. Full of tall people!

BLICK. [Bursting out with passionate eager-

S N O W W H I T E

ness.] But oh, do not think we are afraid. No! We will follow if you will but lead us. Say you will lead us, Berthold!

BERTHOLD. I will lead you. You are my brothers now.

BLICK. You know the way?

BERTHOLD. Like my name.

BLICK. Is it very far?

BERTHOLD. If we journey all night we shall see the city walls by noon.

FLICK. How many people make a city?

SNICK. Shall we fight all the court?

BLICK. Will they—will they laugh at us?

BERTHOLD. [Fiercely.] Laugh? Not for long! The people love her even as we do. You shall bear her on your shoulders. When they see her they will rise to avenge her! And, to the Queen—death!

S C E N E V I

THE DWARFS. [Solemnly.] Death!

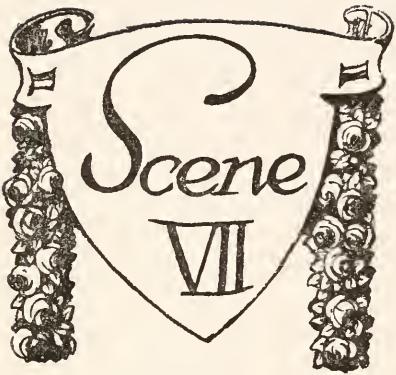

BERTHOLD. We will enter the city crying, “In the name of our Princess Snow White!”

THE DWARFS. [Repeating solemnly.] “In the name of our Princess Snow White!”

BERTHOLD. Lift her up and come.

[Gently the DWARFS raise SNOW WHITE’s coffin on their shoulders, and following BERTHOLD, march out of the moonlit glade and into the deep shadow of the Forest on their way to the City as

THE CURTAIN FALLS

THE THRONE ROOM OF THE PALACE

SIR DANDIPRAT is standing in the middle of the room, surrounded by all the MAIDS OF HONOUR. He looks puzzled and distressed.

ROSALYS. [To SIR DANDIPRAT.] Of course it's to-day that Snow White is coming home.

AMELOTTE. It's a year and a day to-day.

CHRISTABEL. We thought of course you knew.

SIR DANDIPRAT. Dear me; are you sure? It's most important.

CHRISTABEL. She went away to school on the twentieth of June.

ROSALYS. Last year.

SNOW WHITE

ASTOLAIN. And to-day is the twenty-first.

ROSALYS. This year.

CHRISTABEL. So it must be a year and a day to-day.

SIR DANDIPRAT. Pooh, that's not the way to reckon it. It ought to be done by arithmetic. Let me see— [He shuts his eyes and repeats.]

“Thirty days hath September, April, June and . . .”

CHRISTABEL. [Interrupting.] That's no use!

SIR DANDIPRAT. Oh, I know—I know now! How many days are there in a year.

ROSALYS. [Hiding a smile.] Three hundred and sixty-five usually.

SIR DANDIPRAT. I've got it now! Quiet! Quiet! I take June twentieth, [He writes on his tablet with his big gold pencil.] and add three hundred and sixty-five. She ought to arrive on June the three-hundred-and-eighty-fifth. Hm—that can't be right. It's most puzzling.

S C E N E V I I

ROSALYS. Prince Florimond comes to-day too.

SIR DANDIPRAT. What? Prince Florimond too?

ASTOLAIN. Of course—to be engaged to Snow White.

SIR DANDIPRAT. The Prince coming and nothing arranged—nothing! Nobody ever tells me anything at this Court. He may be here any moment, and all the army out hunting for Berthold, and the Dukes and Duchesses scattered all over the place playing croquet! I shall go distracted! I shall go distracted!

[He hurries out onto the terrace, and first turns to the right, then to the left, then to the right again, before he can finally make up his foolish old mind to go the left, and waddles out of sight.]

S N O W W H I T E

CHRISTABEL. I hope Snow White will come before the Prince does.

GUINIVERE. I shall hug her to death.

ASTOLAIN. I didn't really believe a year and a day would ever be over.

ROSALYS. Just think how much she'll know.

CHRISTABEL. I hope she'll know more than the Queen.

ASTOLAIN. And asks questions the Queen can't answer.

ERMENGARDE. Wouldn't that be fun!

CHRISTABEL. Oh, let's play that Snow White is coming home. I'll be Snow White . . .

GUINIVERE. You always want to be Snow White.

CHRISTABEL. [Ignoring the interruption, to ASTOLAIN.] You be the Queen. [To ROSALYS.] You be the Prince.

AMELOTTE. I'll be Sir Dandiprat.

HERE FOR NEARLY A YEAR THEY HAVE WATCHED OVER HER, DAY AND NIGHT

SCENE VII

CHRISTABEL. Well then, announce the Prince.
[And she and ROSALYS run out onto the terrace ready to re-enter as SNOW WHITE and the PRINCE respectively.]

ASTOLAINE. Wait till I get on the throne. [She arranges an imaginary train, then sweeps to the throne and gazes into an imaginary mirror.] I think I'm looking particularly handsome to-day. Any visitors, Sir Dandiprat?

AMELOTTE. [As SIR DANDIPRAT, announcing.] His Royalty Prince Florimond, your Majesty.

[ROSALYS enters as the PRINCE, bowing low in the doorway.

ROSALYS. Has Princess Snow White come home yet, your Majesty? I love her to distraction. I should like to marry her at once, please.

CHRISTABEL. [Peeping in from the terrace.] Now me.

ASTOLAINE. No, wait! Let me talk a little. Dear me, Prince Florimond—I mean, dear us!—we don't understand what you can possibly see in that plain child . . .

SNOW WHITE

[But CHRISTABEL will wait no longer, and appears in the doorway.

AMELOTTE. [Pushing her back.] Wait till I announce you. [Resuming SIR DANDIPRAT's voice.] Here's the Princess now. Most important. The Princess Snow White.

[CHRISTABEL re-enters, makes a curtsey as much like SNOW WHITE'S as she can; then going to PRINCE ROSALYS, she says:

CHRISTABEL. You ought to speak first.

ROSALYS. [As the PRINCE, kneeling.] Snow White, I love you very much. May I kiss your hand?

CHRISTABEL. [As SNOW WHITE.] I should be very much obliged. Now I should like to ask the Queen something. Can your Majesty spell "hippopotamus?" [She adds hastily.] You mustn't be able to.

SCENE VII

ASTOLAIN. [Indignantly.] I wasn't going to! [Then, as the QUEEN again, and in a loud whisper.] However do you spell it, Sir Dandiprat?

AMELOTTE. [As SIR DANDIPRAT.] I can't think, your Majesty.

ASTOLAIN. You never do!

AMELOTTE. [Strutting about with puffed out cheeks.] Really I shall go distracted! I shall go dis . . . [But she has to clap her hand quickly over her mouth for the real SIR DANDIPRAT's voice is heard on the terrace, exclaiming, "Really, I shall go distracted!" ; and in he bustles, followed by all the DUKES and DUCHESSES, whom he hastily arranges in their proper places about the room.]

SIR DANDIPRAT. The Prince is here! The Prince is here! We're keeping his Highness waiting! Quickly, quickly, my dear Dukes and Duchesses. Quickly, quickly!

[A trumpet sounds, and PRINCE FLORIMOND enters, followed by his PAGES. The COURTIERS bow low.

S N O W W H I T E

SIR DANDIPRAT. I'm sorry to have kept your Highness waiting. I'll inform the Queen at once that you've arrived. She's been expecting you all the morning. Just a moment, your Highness. [As he makes for the door he whispers to CHRISTABEL.] Where is the Queen?

CHRISTABEL. Try in front of all the looking-glasses!

SIR DANDIPRAT. [Shocked.] Most disrespectful! You will drive me distracted—distracted! [He paddles off to find the QUEEN.]

THE PRINCE. [To ROSALYS.] Lady Rosalys, has the Princess returned?

ROSALYS. [Curtseying.] Not yet, your Highness, but we expect her every moment.

THE PRINCE. Is she well?

ROSALYS. I don't know, your Highness. She hasn't written to us since she went away.

THE PRINCE. Not a single letter?

[SIR DANDIPRAT reappears and announces.

SCENE VII

SIR DANDIPRAT. Her Majesty, the Queen.

[QUEEN BRANGOMAR enters, and with a haughty nod to PRINCE FLORIMOND, sweeps to the throne.

THE QUEEN. I totally forgot you were coming to-day, Florimond. Stupid of me. Poor boy, I've sad news for you. I ought to have written but I hated to distress you. It's about Snow White.

THE PRINCE. Snow White!

THE QUEEN. I deeply regret to say she is dead.

THE PRINCE. Dead . . . !

THE QUEEN. It happened at boarding-school a few days after she arrived.

THE PRINCE. [Crying out.] Snow White . . . dead . . . !

THE QUEEN. I sent at least eighteen doctors, but it was useless.

[The PRINCE sinks sobbing on the steps of the throne.

SNOW WHITE

THE QUEEN. Pray don't distress yourself. Everything possible has been done. I built a splendid monument over her grave; a tall gilded shaft surrounded by four groups of . . . [Suddenly she sees the stern figure of BERTHOLD. He has been standing silent and unnoticed in the doorway. She cries out.] Berthold!

BERTHOLD. [Advancing.] Yes, Berthold! Berthold, come to punish you!

THE QUEEN. Seize him! Arrest him! Dandiprat, the soldiers!

SIR DANDIPRAT. I'm awfully sorry, your Majesty, but the soldiers are all out hunting for him!

BERTHOLD. I fear neither your soldiers nor your witchcraft now. No army, no Court, no Kingdom will be yours when I have told my tale.

THE QUEEN. [Shrieking.] Don't listen to him! He is mad! I imprisoned him because he was mad.

BERTHOLD. No, for fear that I would reveal your wickedness. But I escaped. I tunnelled under the tower and fled back to the forest to search for Snow White. Last night, in a secret dell, I found . . . [His voice falters.]

SCENE VII

THE PRINCE. [Rising with a cry.] You found her?

BERTHOLD. Yes. But she lay in a coffin all made of shining crystal, as fair as if she were but asleep. And guarding her, day and night, were Seven Dwarfs.

THE QUEEN. But she is dead?

BERTHOLD. Yes, and you did the deed.

THE QUEEN. [Trying to regain her self-control.] Nonsense! The man is quite mad. Snow White died at boarding-school. I made the arrangements myself.

BERTHOLD. With that falsehood on your lips,—look!

[The SEVEN DWARFS appear on the terrace bearing SNOW WHITE's coffin covered with its pall of flowers. They march slowly into the room.

THE QUEEN. [Cowering on her throne in an agony of fear.] The Dwarfs! Merciful stars, what are they bringing? No! No! Take it away, take it away! You shall not bring her here! You shall not!

[Rushing from the throne, the QUEEN hurls herself upon the DWARFS to prevent their setting down the coffin. So sudden is her onslaught that they cannot resist her; and with a crash of crystal it is overturned. With a cry of horror the DWARFS surround it, and the COURTIERS crowd about them.

[For a moment the QUEEN is alone. She seizes the Magic Mirror that hangs at her girdle, and with trembling lips whispers.

THE QUEEN.

Mirror, Mirror, in my hand,
Who's the fairest in the land?

SCENE VII

[What the Mirror answers will never be known for hardly has it begun to speak when, with a cry of rage, the QUEEN dashes it into a thousand pieces on the floor. Suddenly she clasps her hands over her face, sinks to her knees with a moan, and draws her veil close.

[And now there is a gasp of wonder from the COURTIERS, and ROSALYS' voice cries.

ROSALYS. Oh, look! Snow White!

[The group parts, and SNOW WHITE, half supported by the DWARFS, is seen to stir.

THE PRINCE. [Rushing to her.] Snow White!
My beloved! She lives! [He kneels beside her and raises her head.]

SNOW WHITE. [With a deep sigh.] Oh it was such a long, sad dream. I dreamed that I was dead. It was all dark and still. I could not move or see. Then, just now, came that great noise,—was it an earthquake?—and this loosened in my throat. Why, see, it's a little piece of apple! Then there was a warm rushing here. [She lays her hand on her breast.] and I woke up. Or am I dreaming now? No, there are my Dwarfs. And Rosalys and Christabel and . . . Where am I? [With a cry of fear she struggles to her feet.] This is the palace! The Queen will find me! Hide me, brothers, I'm afraid!

BERTHOLD. [Pouncing upon the cowering QUEEN.] She shall never harm you again, my Princess! What shall her punishment be? Let us starve her in the Grey Tower as she would have starved my children.

BLICK. I'll make her a pair of red hot iron shoes to dance in at your wedding.

DANDIPRAT. If I might suggest, your Highness . . .

[But the QUEEN, writhing from BERTHOLD's grasp, creeps to SNOW WHITE's feet, and makes an imploring gesture.

SNOW WHITE. Hush, please, I think she wants to speak to me.

SCENE VII

THE QUEEN. [Whispering.] Yes, to you alone.

SNOW WHITE. She wants to speak to me alone. Please let her.

BERTHOLD. Be careful, Princess!

SNOW WHITE. I'm not afraid any more. Leave us for a moment.

[The others withdraw a little, leaving Snow White and the Queen together.

THE QUEEN. [In a muffled voice.] Oh, Snow White, my punishment has come! I broke the Mirror, and my beauty is gone forever!

SNOW WHITE. The Mirror?

THE QUEEN. Oh, forgive me. I shall never be jealous of you again. Only let me go away where no one can ever see my face. You shall be Queen now. Here is the Crown. [She thrusts it into Snow White's hand.]

SNOW WHITE

SNOW WHITE. [Wonderingly.] I to be Queen? I don't understand.

THE QUEEN. You don't believe me? Then, look,—but, oh let no one else see me! [She lifts her veil a little so that SNOW WHITE alone can see her face.]

SNOW WHITE. Oh, how dreadful! Poor Brangomar! I forgive you, I pity you from the bottom of my heart! [She turns to the others.] Please let the Queen go away unharmed. She wants to go far, far away.

BERTHOLD. [Barring the way.] Unpunished? Never, your Highness!

ALL. Never, never!

SNOW WHITE. I beseech you. She will never harm any one again. I answer for her. I have forgiven her. Let her go.

[Reluctantly the COURTIERS part and make a way for the QUEEN. She kisses the hem of SNOW WHITE's dress; and then, her veil drawn close, makes her way toward the door.

[But just as she reaches the terrace who should appear there but WITCH HEX. She looks very differently now. Instead of her red cloak and pointed hat she wears a neat black silk dress with a white fichu around her shoulders, and a black bonnet with lavender-coloured flowers. On her arm she carries a basket in which is an ordinary sized black cat.

THE WITCH. [Stopping the QUEEN.] High-tighty-tighty, what's all this?

THE QUEEN. [Clinging to her.] Oh, Witch Hex!

ALL. [In consternation.] Witch Hex! The Witch!

THE WITCH. Don't be frightened; not Witch Hex any more! I gave up magic for good and all day before yesterday, burned all my charms, shrunk Fiddle to his natural size, [She shows the cat.] and retired. Perfectly respectable old lady now. But whatever have you been doing to Brangomar?

SNOW WHITE

THE QUEEN. Oh, Hex, I broke the Magic Mirror.

THE WITCH. And turned ugly. I told you you would some day. Well, serves you right. Let's see. [She tries to lift the QUEEN's veil.]

THE QUEEN. [Preventing her.] Oh, no, no, no!

THE WITCH. Oh, yes, yes, yes! You were fond enough of showing your face before. Turn about's fair play. [She snatches off the veil.]

[The QUEEN has surely turned ugly, but it is a funny kind of ugliness. None of her features have changed except her nose, but that has grown enormous—almost a foot long, and very red.

THE WITCH. [Cackling with laughter.] Oh my stars and garters! What a nose! What a nose!

SCENE VII

SNOW WHITE. [Appealingly.] Please don't laugh at her!

THE QUEEN. Oh, Hex, can't you help me?

THE WITCH. Afraid not. The only way to be beautiful without magic is to be good. Who are all these fine folks?

SIR DANDIPRAT. [Strutting forward importantly.] Allow me to present . . .

THE WITCH. [Waving him away.] Shoo, shoo! old turkey-cock!

[Meantime the QUEEN creeps quietly away on the terrace, and is never seen or heard of again.

THE WITCH. [Going to SNOW WHITE.] You must be Snow White. However did you come alive? I made a poisoned apple for you. Glad it didn't work, but why didn't it?

SNOW WHITE. [Smiling.] I think the big greedy bite I took must have stuck in my throat; and just now something happened, and it got joggled out.

S N O W W H I T E

THE WITCH. Glad of it. Always was sorry for you. Who's this nice boy? Oh, Prince Florimond of course. I can guess why you're here. Well, is the betrothal all arranged? [SNOW WHITE hangs her head, and the PRINCE blushes furiously.] Embarrassed, eh? Well, I don't know of any better use for bold old people than to help shy young people. Where's the ring, young man? Oh, come! I'll wager you've been carrying it about for a year. [Shyly PRINCE FLORIMOND produces the ring.] Your hand, Snow White!

SNOW WHITE. Please, do you think I ought to —yet? You see I didn't get to school to be prepared and . . .

THE WITCH. You're just a dear sweet little girl, and that's good enough for any man, prince or pauper. Put it on, Florimond. [The PRINCE does so.] Now, young man, lead her to the throne and crown her properly, and we'll all swear allegiance to our new little Queen.

[With stately grace the young PRINCE leads SNOW WHITE to the throne, and reverently sets the great crown on her little head. Then he kneels before her, and all the COURTiers follow his example. Then there is a great burst of music and all the trumpets in the palace blare. Rising and unsheathing his sword, the PRINCE cries.

THE PRINCE. Love and homage to our little Queen!

ALL. [In a great shout.] Love and homage to our little Queen!

SNOW WHITE. [Furtively brushing away a happy tear.] Oh please . . . please!

[During all this the DWARFS have withdrawn shyly to the furthest corner of the room; but now BLICK, clearing his throat and summoning all his courage, cries:

S N O W W H I T E

BLICK. Brothers! March!

[In military order the DWARFS file to the throne. Some of them think they ought to kneel, and some of them think not, so they wobble for a moment and then stand still.

BLICK. [Stammering.] Your er . . . er . . . your . . . [He gives it up, and bursts out.] Oh Snow White, please tell us what to call you? You see we've never met a Queen before.

SNOW WHITE. Oh my brothers, call me just Snow White—always and always!

BLICK. Snow White, may we go now?

SNOW WHITE. Go? Where?

BLICK. To fetch you our wedding present—all our gold and jewels. We'll make you the richest Queen in the whole world.

SNICK. And then back to our lonely house.

FLICK. And those suppers!

S C E N E V I I

GLICK. And those beds!

SNOW WHITE. No, no! You must stay with me always—always, my brothers.

BLICK. [Hanging his head.] But we are—dwarfs.

SNOW WHITE. There are no nobler men in my kingdom! You shall be my bodyguard, and Berthold shall be your Captain.

BLICK. What do you say, brothers?

QUEE. I say, Hip, hip, hurrah!

ALL THE DWARFS. Hip, hip, hurrah!

THE WITCH. Dear me! I quite enjoy being respectable! And I can't see any reason why you shouldn't live happily ever after.

ROSALYS. Oh Princess, if I don't dance, I shall just die!

CHRISTABEL. And so shall I!

SNOW WHITE

ALL THE MAIDS OF HONOUR. So shall I! So shall I!

SNOW WHITE. [To the PRINCE.] May Queens dance too when they are very, very happy?

THE PRINCE. Do you remember the first words I ever said to you?

“Lady, may I dance with you

“In the measure to ensue?”

SNOW WHITE. And I answered;

“Sir, could any maid withstand

“Such a flattering command?”

[She gives him her hand, and they all whirl off into the gayest and happiest dance you can imagine—even the DWARFS (who, you remember, never could learn) hopping solemnly for joy, as
